Why Bonds Are Cheap
ADDITIONAL Government financing to pay war expenses and uncertainty as to the fate of the railroads is mainly responsible for present low prices of good bonds.
AFTER large wars a temporary lull in business has usually resulted, followed by a long period of prosperity and lower interest rates. With improving economic conditions it will no longer be possible to obtain the attractive income returns now available from sound bonds.

Advantage of Buying Bonds At Present Prices
1. Lowest Prices in more than a decade afford large yields to the investor with the same security as before.

$4,000,000 PAID FOR NEW AUTOS AT SHOW

Buying an Object Lesson in Optimism, Say Men in Motor Car Industry.

TRUCK-TRACTOR SHOW NOW

New York Dealers Are Anxious to Manage Future Shows Here Instead of Manufacturers.

More than $4,000,000 was spent for automobiles last week during the motor car show in Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory. This means that more than 2,000 new cars, averaging in value about $1,800, were sold to as many private buyers in the New York territory.

It is the largest volume of business ever done directly at any New York automobile show, and the motor car manufacturers who have been in attendance freely admitted that it presents the clearest object lesson for optimism in the financial and industrial world that the motor car industry has experienced since the United States entered the war, nearly two years ago.

The passenger car section of the show closed last night with an attendance in both buildings which was fully up to the record-breaking crowds of the preceding days. The removal of the highly polished passenger cars began before midnight last night, and today the big motor trucks and tractors will be placed in the Garden and armory for the commercial car shaw week, opening tomorrow night.

Trucks and Tractors Move In.

This is the first time a two weeks' consecutive automobile show under the same management has ever been held in New York and also the first time that a distinct commercial car exhibit has ever been held here. All the floor space in both buildings has been taken and as the motor truck is assuming such importance as a medium for more efficient highway transportation throughout the country, the truck show week promises to be fully as interesting, although to a different class of persons, as was the passenger car exhibit.

The unexpected success of this year's show, coming so soon after the virtual closing of the war and while many of the large manufacturers are still in a stage of readjustment from the making of munitions to peace time production, led many motorists yesterday to ask whether the New York automobile dealers, who have conducted the show would assert the right to hold the annual show next year at the expense of the manufacturers affiliated with the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, under whose auspices the national shows in New York have formerly been held.

This is an interesting question that will be thoroughly discussed by the prominent motoring interests during the next few months. The managing committee of the New York dealers, realizing that the show was a bigger success than many had expected, are strongly inclined to continue as the automobile show managers in New York City. Charles H. Larson, in discussing the situation with Charles M. Brown, President of the New York Dealers' Association, and William C. Poertner, said very positively:

"I can see no right or reasonable way that can now be used by the manufacturers to take the show management from the dealers who are distributing the cars in the metropolitan territory. Many of the manufacturers are taking the view that the time in the industry has passed when it is necessary for its national organization to conduct the national shows. The industry has grown to such an extent that the big individual shows, as those in New York, Chicago, Boston, Minneapolis, and Philadelphia, possess most of the features of the former so-called national shows hitherto restricted, so far as name was concerned, to New York and Chicago.

Ready to Give Show Next Year.

"The New York show under the dealers and with the co-operation of the manufacturers, which has been splendidly given this year, will naturally be regarded as the big national show of the year, for it is the one in which the makers always strive to give the first general exhibit of their new models. The New York dealers are ready to give next year's show as it is logically a dealers' event."

Charles A. Stewart, manager of the show, expressed similar views. The members of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce which contains over 120 of the big car makers in the country, abandoned the plan to give the customary 1919 show before the signing of the armistice as a war measure, and after the cessation of hostilities they voted to adhere to that decision. The New York dealers, as well as the dealers in Chicago, stepped into the breach at once and saved the situation for the motor car indusetry as to the big shows of the year, and it is now admitted that the stability of the motor car industry has been presented in a more favorable light before the public than would have been the case if the two big shows of the year had been omitted.

Judging from many reports heard in the Garden, the American automobile export business will be very large within the next few years. A representative of motor car and accessories dealers in India and Arabia was present during the week making contracts for large shipments of cars and parts to those countries. Charles E. Miller, who deals in nearly every accessory for motor car use ever made or heard of, said that in the first four days of last week's show he had contracted for more business here and abroad than he had ever done in the entire week of former exhibits. The exhibitor of a motor drill press in the Garden was visited by a Glasgow merchant yesterday who left an order for an early shipment.

NICKEL'S EARNINGS DECLINE

Report for Nine Months Shows Surplus of $4,671,391.

The International Nickel Company in a report for the nine months ended Dec. 31, 1918, shows a surplus after charges, war taxes, and preferred dividends of $4,671,391, this being equivalent to $2.79 a share on the outstanding common stock. This compares with $3.10 a share which was earned in the corresponding period of 1917.

The earnings for the nine months amounted to $10,988,140, a decrease of approximately $800,000 from the 1917 figures. Total income amounted to $11,097,605. Of this amount $3,829,680 was set aside for United States and foreign taxes. This allowance includes the estimate of additional United States taxes assessable for three months ended March 31, 1918.

Pledge Support to New Loan.

William G. Baker, Jr., of Baltimore, President of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, presided over his first meeting of the Board of Governors at the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday, when resolutions were adopted pledging the support of the association to co-operation in the forthcoming Liberty Loan campaign. Twenty-four of the thirty-three officers and members of the Board of Governors attended the meeting. It was decided to hold the next quarterly meeting after the loan campaign at White Sulphur Springs, Va., some time in May.

The Daily Riders.

An average number of 5,412,280 persons used the city's transit lines every day last year.

CAMPAIGN TO LIMIT 1919 COTTON DECRIED

Experts Here Alarmed Over Movement to Curtail the New Crop Acreage.

SEES ECONOMIC MISTAKE

Effort Should Be to Produce as Much as Possible as Cheaply as Possible, Says A. Norden.

Any campaign designed to limit the supply of American cotton, whether it be by reducing acreage to be planted for the new crop or through the withholding from market or the destruction of stocks already grown, is economically wrong and bound to redound to the great detriment of the South, according to cotton experts who are now becoming alarmed over the strenuous efforts of some Southern bankers, merchants, politicians, and farmers to force a decided curtailment of acreage this Spring.

"From an economic viewpoint the success of this movement would be a mistake," says A. Norden of the New York Cotton Exchange. "The effort should be to produce as much cotton as possible as cheaply as possible, and not as little as possible to be held for monopoly prices, for the very good reason that a long period of high prices will encourage competition in production and substitution in consumption.

"It has always been popular to believe that cotton growing on a large scale was limited to the United States, India, and Egypt, and the little success in the attempts in tropical Africa during the last several years has probably encouraged that idea.

"Now, however, three new fields must be watched: China, which has always raised considerable cotton, which, has only partially reached international trade channels, has now awakened from its isolation of centuries, and with increasing foreign trade, improvement of methods, its teeming millions accustomed to small wages and profits and cheap living, and the ever increasing assistance of Japanese initiative, that country may become a serious competitor; South Africa, with, in a great extent of territory, about the same climatic conditions as our cotton belt, is already producing cotton profitably; Mesopotamia, the garden spot of the earth, is just starting on a new era under civilized government, with irrigated work on a large scale already under way."

Referring to the possibilities of substitution, Mr. Norden calls attention to the fact that under blockade conditions, according to the best advices available, Germany successfully substituted paper yarn for cotton yarn, with especial success in its mixture with cotton and wool and shoddy. The Frankfurter Zeitung estimated that the production of paper yarn was about 88,000,000 pounds a year, and expects production to increase rather than to diminish, especially if the price of American cotton is maintained at 25 or 30 cents a pound.

Manhattan Building Statistics.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Securities values closed heavy in a dull market yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Final prices recorded net losses of from a fraction to more than 2 points. What trading obtained was wholly professional in character and represented chiefly floor operations. Stocks were not in great supply, but, in the absence of any pronounced demand, prices declined.

The Merchant's Point of View

Meetings of retailers in different lines have been rather frequent of late in this city as well as in other places. At about this time of year they are in a position to know how they stand as regards the past year's business and are usually able to determine what their policy shall be for forward commitments. Just now they have no doubts as to the first of these, but they are in a decided quandary as to the other. Retail clothiers and other similar bodies meeting in this and other States have recently expressed themselves in this matter and, this week, the National Retail Dry Goods Association, which is to meet in this city, will have the opportunity of comparing the ideas on the subject which are entertained by representatives from all sections of the country. For most, if not all, of them the past year has been a very good one. Money has been plentiful, due to the bounteous yield of fields, forests, and mines whose products have sold at high prices, and to the employment of labor at wages greater than ever before. At present, with the exception of the case of the wheat farmer, values are passing through the threshold of deflation. While the movement is in progress the risks of trading are increased and particularly by that intangible factor—the buying inclination of people receiving smaller incomes and expected to pay more for what they buy.

Who Shall Bear the Burden.

A very noted cartoon of Thomas Nast concerning the old Tweed Ring in this city, which has been often reproduced, showed a circle of the members of the gang, each man pointing to the other as the one responsible for the frauds. It represented what is in poker vernacular called "passing the buck." There are those who believe it might be invoked to indicate the attitude at the present time of different factors in business. Every one concedes that, in the process of readjustment from inflated values to what may be considered normal, there must be a loss. When it comes, however, to settling the matter of who shall bear this loss, agreement stops. Each one along the line, from producer to consumer, seems anxious to place the burden on the other. All the others would cheerfully permit the consumer to foot the loss, but they are becoming convinced of his unwillingness to bear the burden, and without his consent the plan cannot be carried out. The consumer's attitude is that what loss must be incurred should be assumed by the others, beginning at the producer and ending with the retailer, some or all of whom made larger than ordinary profits while the boom was on. As the whole business structure depends on the consumer, it is likely that in the main his views will prevail, and that the losses of readjustment will be apportioned between the producer, wholesaler or jobber, and the retailer. A reduction in prices seems essential to insure a continuance of buying on a satisfactory scale by the general public.

Producers Not Free from Blame.

Among the chorus of complaints about the disinclination of buyers to operate, not much is voiced as to the responsibility of many of the producers for the existence of the very condition they deplore. Most of the hesitation by the buyers is because they are uncertain that the prices quoted really represent rock-bottom figures or even those which may be made to favored customers. And, for this uncertainty, producers are in many instances to blame. This was illustrated a short time ago with regard to the trade prices for knit goods. As to these, the trade association declined to urge the maintenance of certain fixed prices—very wisely, because the law forbids this. But some individuals united in a broadside giving alleged reasons why prices must stay up. At the same time, selling agents have been offering all kinds of inducements and guarantees to buyers to get orders. In other lines, similar things have occurred. At the beginning of the week the Amoskeag Company, which is a very large factor in certain fabrics, opened up its Fall lines of dress goods. The price list was kept secret, but figures were given out to trade papers of a few varieties which showed cuts in price. But with this was made the announcement that the real prices to be charged would be those prevalent at the date of the invoice, if lower than at present. This was not calculated to increase the confidence of buyers as to stability of values, although designed to urge them to put in their orders early. The trouble seems to be that many concerns, instead of trying to help trade by reducing prices to the lowest profitable point, are endeavoring to keep up their war profits if, on experiment, they find they can do this. In striking contrast with such methods is the positive stand taken by the Cleveland jobbing house of Root & McBride. This concern announces it will give its customers the benefits of any reductions it may obtain, but will insist that they shall abide by the terms of contracts hitherto entered into.

Effect of the Labor Troubles.

Labor troubles, which had been anticipated, came to a head in the textile industries during the last week and, in quite a number of cases, proved less serious than expected. In many instances the workers appeared content with securing the forty-eight-hour week without the accompaniment of fifty-four-hour pay. And manufacturers, especially those who cannot afford just now to run full time because of a lack of orders, were by no means loath to see the outcome. There are cases of cotton mills which are on the basis of a thirty-five-hour week divided into five working days of seven hours each, and which find their output rather more than enough in view of what they are selling. In some quarters, it is also worth noting, rather an exaggerated emphasis is placed on the effect which a shortening of the hours of labor will have on the cost of goods. Thus, for example, the reduction from fifty-four to forty-eight hours means a decrease of 11 per cent. in the working time, and this is often put forward as an indication that the cost of goods must be thereby added to by that percentage. This is, of course, fallacious. Even conceding that workpeople will be no more efficient if working eight hours a day than if they kept at it for nine hours, the increase in cost of production would be 11 per cent. of the labor cost only. This labor cost, in normal times, represents anywhere from 15 to 19 per cent. of the selling price. So that an 11 per cent. increase in the labor price would not cut so very serious a figure. It may be well, too, to bear in mind the British experience during wartime activities when it was shown that the output was larger when working hours were reduced.

January's Very Fair Showing.

January is a month which is usually the subject of some careful consideration by business men, and especially by those who are watching credits. It follows the holiday selling, when trade is artificially stimulated by sentiment, and anticipates the yearly inventories of retailers with their sometimes unexpected revelation of adverse conditions. With the readjustment now in progress, there was even a little more than the usual interest in learning how things were going last month. One of the indications—that showing business embarrassments—is very reassuring. Reports to Dun's agency show that not only were the failures in January, contrary to the usual tendency, below those of December, but that the number was the smallest for any January on record, and that only in January of 1905, 1900, 1899, and 1898 was the indebtedness less. The actual number of failures in the country last month was 683, and the indebtedness was $12,249,483. A year ago for the same month the figures were 1,178 and $19,278,787, respectively, and that was at a time of supposed abounding prosperity. The reduction in the number of failures this year is especially marked in the case of merchants or traders, of whom 801 failed in January, 1918, and only 438 last month. While the gratifying nature of these figures gives evidence of sound business conditions, it also bears witness to the more careful scrutiny of credits and the general disposition to be cautious in the period of uncertainty through which the country is passing.

Raw Cotton and Cotton Goods.

Even the effect of lowered ocean freights has been unavailing in keeping up cotton quotations. There have been no evidences of any large exports, and domestic spinners, who have labor and other troubles on hand, are not much inclined to buy. But, even beyond these factors, is the one that seems more controlling, and this is the lack of orders for cotton goods of almost any description. Mill men are not disposed to go on manufacturing and piling up a surplus of fabrics for which there is no market at present, and they are quite confident that the prices for their products are more likely to go down than up. Under these circumstances they are in no hurry to add to their stock of raw material. In the South much of the crop is in the hands of merchants who bought it at high prices and who stand to take a pretty heavy loss unless levels can be maintained. The cotton year is already half gone, and, unless things change for the better soon, prices must fall or arrangements must be made for carrying over a great deal of cotton to the next year. There is still a chance that buying of cotton goods on a large scale may set in, but this will not occur until purchasers have become convinced that prices have got down to bedrock. In such event the price of the raw material will be benefited beyond doubt.

Wool Prices and Woolen Fabrics.

It is not exactly easy to determine what the Government auction sales of wool indicate beyond the fact that buyers show little disposition to pay more than the minimum prices fixed. This, furthermore, is only true as to the desirable kinds of wool. It is predicted that when the whole series of auctions is over the Government will be left with a whole lot of wool on hand which is not readily salable, and that a better policy would have been to let go of the material quickly for what it would bring. While on this subject it is worth calling to notice that the entire consumption of wool in domestic mills last year was the equivalent of only 740,000,000 pounds in the grease. This is only about 140,000,000 pounds more than in peace time, in spite of the lavishly absurd quantities used in making up military supplies. It bears out the statements made last year in these columns which at the time were questioned by some gentlemen temporarily stationed at Washington. In the goods market the principal feature was the American Woolen Company's opening of Fall mackinaws and friezes which showed large reductions from last year's prices. They seem to indicate pretty clearly that the company is trying to get what business it can and that it is not disposed to haggle about prices. There were some also who professed to see in the cuts, amounting to 40 per cent. or so, a disposition on the part of the largest factor in the trade to undersell a smaller competitor which had been rash enough to come in ahead with what seemed like steep reductions. The action would appear to foretell similar drastic price cuts on fancy goods in the other openings which are to follow. Such a happening would mean lower clothing prices for next Fall.

DRY GOODS MEN TO MEET.

Retailers' Convention to be in Session Here This Week.

The eighth annual convention of the National Retail Dry Goods Association opens tomorrow at the Hotel Pennsylvania, with a meeting of the Board of Directors. The convention proper starts on Tuesday morning at o'clock and will end with a special reception, lecture, and exhibit tendered to the members by the Art Alliance of America.

At least 1,000 members are expected to attend the convention and much anxiety is felt in regard to their being able to obtain hotel accommodations. The Secretary, however, has made this fact known to the members and, while some have already made arrangements, others have not.

Some well-known persons will address the convention, among them being V. Everit Macy, President of the National Civic Federation; Fred Rike, who will give a report on the work of the War Service Committee, and Jesse Isidor Straus. At the banquet, which will take place on Wednesday evening, the toastmaster will be Francis Kilduff and the speakers will include Marcel Knecht, member of the French High Commission; Secretary Redfield of the Department of Commerce, and the Rev. S. Edward Young.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

A Setback in That of Japan Also Influenced Canton's.

A severe setback occurred in the Japanese raw silk market during the past week, Sinshiu No. 1 declining to 1,300 yen, according to cables received by A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc. On good buying from this country the price advanced to 1,350 yen. Yesterday's price was 1,340 yen for this grade, and the demand is getting less. The visible stock is estimated at 28,500 bales.

The Canton market, influenced by that at Yokohama, also declined from 10 to 15 cents a pound without stimulating buying. At Shanghai the market continues quiet, with slight concessions for steam filatures. Tsatlees are obtainable, while tussahs are apparently firm and held on the old basis. The Italian market remains lifeless.

Locally there has been quite a spurt, and manufacturers, mostly outside of Paterson, have placed fair-sized orders for immediate delivery, and in some instances, for two months in advance.

Goods for Lyons Fair.

The French General Customs Administration has announced that, as in previous years, merchandise to be exhibited at the coming Lyons Fair may be imported without special authorization. The period allowed for re-exportation of such merchandise will extend to three months after the end of the fair, and the exportation of the goods will be subject to no special formalities. If exhibitors so desire, they may dispose of the merchandise for consumption in France upon payment of the usual import duties applicable to the respective articles.

Gray Goods Trading Light.

Not much business was transacted in the local gray goods market yesterday, and much was heard of proposals on the part of mills to shut down until buying on a fair scale should be resumed. In printcloths sales were reported of 39-inch 68-72s at 10¾ cents and of 38½-inch 64-60s and 64-56s at 9 and 8¾ cents respectively. Sales also were made of 36-inch four-yard sheetings at 13 cents and of five-yard goods at 9¼ cents.

Leaf Tobacco in the Country.

The amount of leaf tobacco held by the manufacturers and dealers in this country on Jan. 1 of this year amounted to 1,234,884,396 pounds, as compared with 1,176,234,657 pounds on the same date last year. The total for Jan. 1, 1919, includes 1,074,175,156 pounds of unstemmed and 160,709,240 pounds of stemmed leaf tobacco.

Goatskins Await Shipment Here.

The American Consul at Aden, Arabia, has cabled to the Department of Commerce that the estimated number of goatskins accumulated and awaiting shipment at that port is about 600,000 pieces. Of this amount probably 400,000 are ready to be shipped to this country.

THE Brumbaugh SYSTEM.
OUTDOOR ADVERTISING SERVICE

CHICAGO. Jan. 9th, 1919.

Commercial Credit Co.,

Gentlemen:

In reviewing our Auditor's reports of our business for the last 18 months, since we began doing business with you, we find the results so gratifying as to possibly be of interest to you, and if desired you may use our name.

When we began doing business with you some 18 months ago we were not in position to borrow from our banks the large amount necessary to carry on our operations on an extensive scale, and could see no way of doing so unless by an increased capitalization.

Through your plan of cashing our accounts, we have accomplished our aims by having more than doubled the volume of our business, and have placed this company where it is now perhaps the largest of its kind in the country - all this without increasing our capitalization one dollar. Today our stockholders are in position to retain all of the future profits, without having to share them with added stockholders.

We have often wondered why other concerns do not avail themselves of a system such as yours, thereby keeping their profits. Perhaps it is because of the mistaken idea sometimes prevalent that your plan is not good banking, an idea that would quickly be eliminated if a little time were spent in analysing your plan.

Because of our growth, our banking connections are now such that we can secure all of the assistance which we may need - yet we consider it a good policy to continue our relationship with you whereby an immediate conversion of accounts into cash, without disturbing our customers with notice, will enable us to complete even larger undertakings.

Yours very truly,

THE BRUMBAUGH SYSTEM

ANCIENT PRACTICES
MODERN METHODS

SELLING MERCHANDISE	is business.
SELLING TERMS	is lending money.
DOING BOTH	yields a profit on the sale and a loss on the money because the time terms bring no interest. Have you ever stopped to compute this loss?
THE OPERATOR	with cash buys best, sells most and makes multiplied profits.
CASH ON DELIVERY	is desirable but unobtainable under the ancient business practices.
BUT	it is equivalent to cash on delivery to have us advance immediate cash against your accounts and it is Sound Business. It is the Modern Method. It enables you to increase your sales.
THE COST	of this service is small, in effect is no cost because it is a tax on the sales you would otherwise not make, viz.: 1-30 of 1% per day (1% per month) figured to the exact number of days until payment—no commissions, no exchange.
NON NOTIFICATION	to customers enables concerns of $35,000 capital to collect the accounts in their usual way.

Flexible Capital

What the Federal Reserve System accomplished for the nation in general, the Manufacturers' Finance Company does for your individual business.

The former gives the country an elastic currency which expands and contracts as the exigencies arise—our service makes your working capital equally flexible.

When you desire to expand, or to relieve the financial strain during your heavy seasons, you sell us your accounts receivable (not past due) thus converting your book assets into cash. Thus your working capital is doubled, as your money is immediately available for quick turnover. You use our service only as the need arises—you are not obligated as to volume.

This makes our service fill your every need, giving you, as it does, when most needed, dependable, prompt and elastic capital for temporary use.

There is no red tape about our service. Merely a duplicate invoice showing terms and conditions of sale, with bill-of-lading, delivery ticket or express receipt attached, is all that is required to establish evidence of an account with us.

Progressive manufacturers who have used our service for years testify to its stabilizing influence on their business. Complete details on request.

on $100,000 capital, now finds itself held back by lack of sufficient capital to meet the tremendous influx of new business. There never was such a "Golden Age" of advertising as this reconstruction period is producing. Every manufacturer is looking to advertising to help solve the problems caused by the war, labor, prohibition, Government control, shortage of material, over-expanded factory facilities, high prices, &c., &c.

A PERMANENT, PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.

This is the time of all times to get into an advertising agency, both as a permanent paying investment and as a business paying high salaries for talent.

The young, ambitious, educated man, with capital, finds here an opportunity to invest safely in a tried and proven firm, controlled now by active, experienced advertising men known and recognized nationally for their leadership and sound character.

with a present, prosperous national business, having several most unusual, exclusive and money-making features.

This agency is now a member of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the Audit Bureau of Circulations, The National Outdoor Advertising Bureau, and the National Association of Credit Men. It is equipped to handle all phases of newspaper, magazine, bill board, painted and electric sign, street car, farm and trade journal, direct and foreign advertising.

SHOULD EARN 40% THIS YEAR.

$150,000 additional capital could be used with greatly increased profit. One new development should make the agency earn not less than 40 per cent. this year, with sufficient capital to handle it.

GOOD SALARY TO EXPERIENCED MAN.

Capital from experienced advertising men, who would invest their brains, (for a good salary, too,) with their capital, would be ideal. But the present management feels sure of a large return for capital alone.

EVERY LETTER STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

In writing please state whether you are the principal, or a go-between; what capital you could invest; what advertising experience you or your principal have had; character references; phone call, &c. Every communication will be held in strict confidence by men who know how to respect confidential matters. Address Agency Expansion, Z 296 Times Annex.

TRIBULATIONS OF ONE WAIST BUYER

The Kind of Reception He Met with from Employes in Divers Establishments.

"It seems to me," said a buyer recently, "that if some of the manufacturers in this city gave more attention to the hiring of their employes, both male and female, it would certainly increase the efficiency of their organizations."

"In just what respect?" asked a TIMES reporter.

"As an example," said the buyer, "I went in to see a certain manufacturer one morning last week about buying a bill of waists. It was my first visit to the establishment and will probably be my last. In stepping out of the elevator I noticed two or three people sitting in the office, but none seemed to be interested as to who came in. I walked into the showroom and waited around a while. In the meantime one of the girls looked in, and I thought perhaps she would call one of the salesmen. However, she was not apparently interested. I waited fully ten minutes for some one to show up and wait on me. At last my patience was exhausted and I started to go out.

"Just as I was stepping onto the elevator to go down, a man came running out of the office to see me. I later learned he was the owner. 'What can I do for you?' he asked. 'Nothing,' I replied. 'I have waited at least fifteen minutes for some one to see me, but I cannot wait all day, so it will be necessary for me to buy my waists elsewhere.'

"'I was busy,' he said; and, 'My time is limited,' I replied, 'but I will tell you frankly that you could have sold me a bill of goods if it had not been for the indifferent attitude shown by the people in your office.'

"I have often wondered if process servers are frequent visitors in the cloak and suit trade. My reason for saying this is that, on many occasions before one has a chance to enter the showroom, a glass door in a partition will open in some concealed place and a voice will say, 'What is it?'

"That, 'What is it?' certainly does make me sore. Why in heaven's name don't they give a man a chance to get his bearings before shooting that at him? The worst part of it is, the voice that usually calls out is some young girl in her teens, with her face plastered up with powder and paint until she looks like a circus clown. Nine times out of ten she has that inevitable wad of gum in her mouth. It is absolutely disgusting. I have often seen these 'tango Lizzies' in the subway, standing before a mirror in a chewing gum machine, adjusting their hair and fussing with themselves in general. What I can't understand is why the business men of your city continue to hire them. They are certainly not an ornament of any kind; in fact, many times I feel they are more of a detriment to business.

"Then there is another type that is sometimes used as a buffer at the entrance of an office. One of these in particular whom I remember I met last Fall when I was in town. She sat at her desk busily engaged in polishing her finger nails and reading a book. When she had finished reading the last few lines, she looked up and said, 'What is it?'

"That same old 'What is it?' stuff again, I thought. 'Is Mr. K. in?' I asked. 'What do you want to see him about?' she inquired. 'I asked you whether he was in,' I replied. 'Do you want to sell him something or do you want to see the line?' By this time I was getting rather angry. 'Neither,' I replied. 'What I want to know is whether Mr. K. is in or out.' 'He is out,' she said. 'Thank you,' I said. 'Oh, you're welcome,' and she again resumed polishing her nails and reading.

"Thoughtlessness on the part of employes often irritates a buyer to a great extent. One case of this kind happened yesterday afternoon, when I was looking for a certain line of merchandise. This time the employe was a boy, probably 22 years of age.

"'Is Mr. S. in?' I inquired, upon presenting my card. 'Yes,' replied the boy, 'but he is busy just now. Will you wait?' 'Yes, I will wait a few minutes for him,' I said. Naturally, I thought he would present my card so that the head of the house would at least know that I was waiting to see him. Instead, however, as there was not much business at the time, he put the card in his pocket and rejoined his friends at the other end of the room.

"In the meantime another man came in and he, too, asked to see Mr. S. This time another boy came forward and took the gentleman's card in to the owner. When he was disengaged he sent for the man whose card had been presented to him, while I sat outside and waited. However, when he was through this time, he came out of his office and saw me waiting. I told him in a smiling way what had happened and he apologized for his employe's thoughtlessness. I might add that in the future it is likely this boy will give more attention to business.

"In another instance I was, curiously enough, taken for an advertising solicitor. Maybe the weather had something to do with it, because that day it was raining quite hard. As I stepped off the elevator I looked around to find a place to put my umbrella. However, before I found one, a girl's voice called through a little glass loophole, 'Yes, Sir?'

"'I would like to see the proprietor if he is in,' I said. The girl looked down at a magazine that I happened to have with me and said: 'We do not do any advertising, and I know he would not care to see you.' Things were now getting very interesting. So I said to her, 'I think a little advertising might be of value to your employer. If I were he, I would advertise for a girl to take your place, and I would try to get one who would not jump at conclusions. As a matter of fact, I am not here to solicit advertising, but rather to buy merchandise.' The changed expression that came over her face was pitiful, and it did not take her long to tell the head of the house that I wanted to see him.

"These instances that I have mentioned to you are only a few that I suppose occur daily, and perhaps pass by unnoticed. However, they are at all times amusing to me. As I said before, if some of the manufacturers in your city would only use a little more judgment in selecting their employees, there is no doubt that they could increase the efficiency of their organizations."

SUFFERING GROWS IN WAR-RENT LANDS

Letters Describe Need in Liberated Parts of France as Greater Than Ever Before.

LACK OF WARM CLOTHING

Siberian Aid Fund Committee Appeals for 500 Tons of Cloth and Footwear.

The cry for civilian relief abroad continues to grow in insistence, and especially is the need for clothes indicated by the reports received by the relief organizations. Letters from Gabriel Hanotaux and Whitney Warren assert that the need of the liberated districts of France is greater than ever before and that the disorder is indescribable. These messages, according to the bulletin of the Secours National Committee, would seem to indicate that the allied Governments have not as yet organized their relief work in such manner as to obviate the necessity for such organizations, and the Secours National believes that it will be several months before the allied Governments' relief organizations will properly function.

"In the meantime," the bulletin continues, "we feel it our duty to continue the work we have undertaken. Our present balance on hand at time of going to press is only $1,977.94. Therefore we shall indeed be grateful if you will continue your support through the months of February, March, and April, after which it is intended to wind up the affairs of this committee and issue an audited report on same."

One weakness of those who would be generous to the Serbians is to send such useless apparel as boudoir caps, satin slippers, and spangled scarfs, whereas underclothing, men's suits, warm wraps, garments for children of all ages, and footwear for men, women, and children are sadly needed. The Serbian Aid Fund Clothing Committee opened its workroom during the week at 338 Madison Avenue, in anticipation of its drive for 500 tons of clothing.

"We appeal especially for bolts of material, or for pieces of strong cotton goods in any length, from a yard up," said Mrs. Duncan Kennedy, who is in charge. "So muddy and torn are the Serbian roads that all the people wear rude puttees, cut in strips and wound round the legs to the knee. Such protection wards off colds, tuberculosis, and pneumonia. We do not want short bits of chiffon, voile or any other summery and unsubstantial material. We do hope that at least 500 tons of strong, clean, warm clothing and footwear will be contributed to aid these brave people in their task of rebuilding Serbia."

Dr. Livingston Farrand was recently appointed by President Wilson as head of the American Red Cross. He is an authority on health matters, having been President of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, and also Treasurer of the American Public Health Association. For his work in this field Dr. Farrand was chosen soon after the United States entered the war as director of the tuberculosis work in France for the International Health Board. He assumes his new position as head of the Central Committee of the Red Cross on March 1, at which time the War Council, which has been in charge of the Red Cross since America entered the war, will retire.

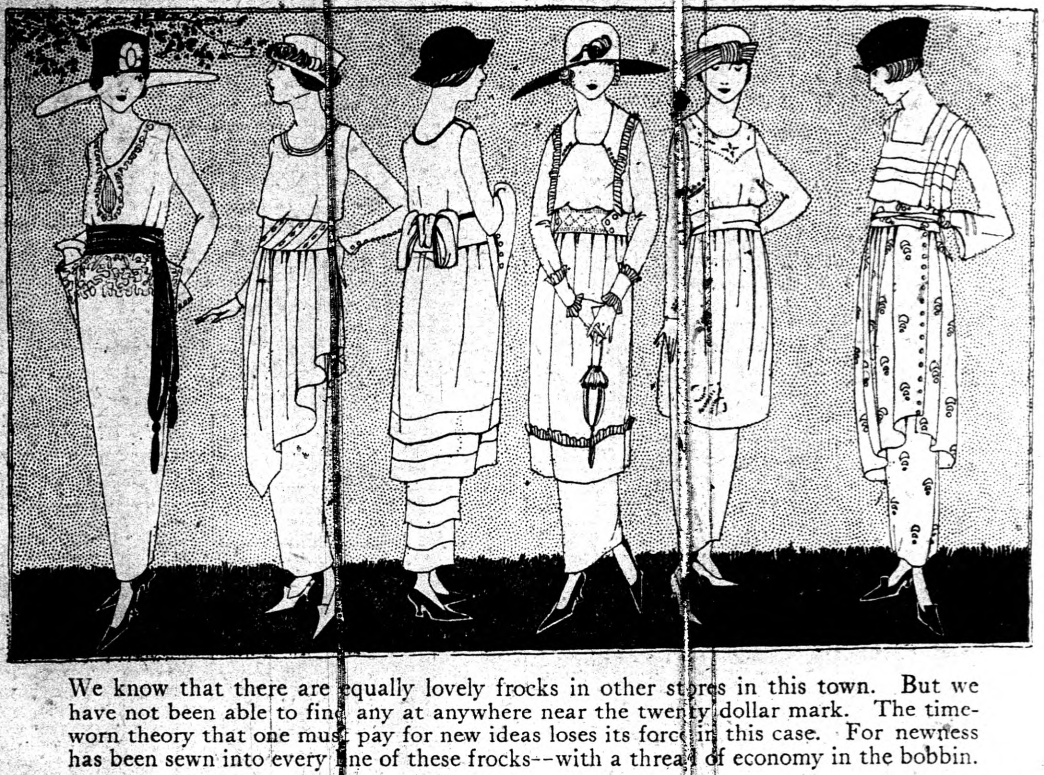
$20 for these New Spring Frocks
IS A PRICE THAT FAILS TO CONVEY AN IDEA OF THEIR GREAT CHARM AND DISTINCTIVENESS



We know that there are equally lovely frocks in other stores in this town. But we have not been able to find any at anywhere near the twenty dollar mark. The time-worn theory that one must pay for new ideas loses its force in this case. For newness has been sewn into every line of these frocks—with a thread of economy in the bobbin.

Taffeta, Foulard, Georgette, Crepe de Chine, Wool Jersey, Serge—which of the Spring fabrics do you prefer? You'll find every one of them in this group—in a model you may wear with perfect confidence.

New shades are in evidence, but, every woman will be glad to know that her favorite navy is still in the front rank. Black and white are wanted, too. All sizes, of course.

Girls and Misses Now Have a New Section All Their Own

Prices Will Be Moderate—Consistently

Being a "tweeny" isn't much fun. To a Miss of fourteen summers, the little girl styles are odious. And the womanly styles are worse. So there is only one solution—Miss Fourteen must have a style of her very own. It must follow Mother's—but it must be different—subtly different.

THE WAR TAX BILL.

The country has come to lament rather than to boast the bigness of our multi-billion war accounts. Those who are to provide the twelve billions of loan and tax money which the Treasury must have within the next few months find no consolation in the fact that no other nation, and probably no other two nations or perhaps even any three nations, could do what they have to do. They would have accepted the burden with so much better temper and carried it so much more easily in the months behind than in the months ahead that the taxlayers have prepared a poor reception for their work. Congress will not be surprised at that, for it has chosen to leave out the suggestions of business men and tax experts to make the taxes as few and fruitful as possible, and has preferred to persist with its own methods of laying many taxes yielding protests more abundantly than dollars. The bill is 362 pages long, and so many words were necessary because, for one reason, of the multiplicity of taxes. There was no difficulty in finding two taxes, the war excess profits and income taxes, which together are expected to yield almost five of the six billions total. No other tax will yield even a half billion. For the sake of many comparatively small schedules there are levied taxes which will cause the most irritation for the smallest yield ingenuity could devise, it would seem.

The complexity of the taxes is worse than the multiplicity. Pinpricks in the pocket nerve are annoying, but intricacies of taxation cause evasion, both deliberate and unintentional. No business men with affairs of moderate or larger proportions can make out their tax bills without costly advice. It seems to them that this is imposed upon them almost maliciously, due to insistence upon original errors persisted in against both counsel and common sense. When Congress passed its first income tax it was advised of the distinction between income and capital, but the sentiment was so strongly anti-capitalist that deliberate attempt was made to tax capital as income. The attempt failed, for income taxes on capital which the Treasury collected were refunded by order of court. The second income tax, instead of complying with the court's declaration of law, sought to evade the decision by declaring capital to be income, and taxing it accordingly. The court annulled the second attempt as it did the first. And now the bill contains a third attempt, by laying taxes on stock dividends, as income, to do what ought not to be done.

The war excess profits tax shows the same persistence in error. When the second war excess profits tax was passed it was simply superposed upon the first, instead of being rewritten. At the third attempt there is a single law, but there are impositions of schedules upon schedules and alternation of methods which make the help of counsel and accountants indispensable. At the very least these calculations might have been made once for all, and the equivalent yields enacted in a single total, instead of additions making it prudent or often necessary to calculate the taxes in different ways to find which to pay. There is no complaint from the lawyers and accountants. Their advertisements fill the newspapers.

It is thought that 20,000,000 individuals must pay income taxes. No corporation guilty of profits has been allowed to escape. The more the angrier, but that is not a count against the bill. All ought to pay their share, and never were taxpayers more ready than they were before the bill was made public, with its obnoxious and inexpedient qualities. The Steel Corporation's tax appropriations for two years were $507,754,000, and other corporations pay less only because their scale of business is smaller. Taxation which equals capital common stock in two years is conscription of capital by halves instead of in a single operation. The objection is not that the money is taken, but that it is taken in a manner so depressing to industry. Long ago railways were cured of enterprise, and now the remedy for excess of profits is applied to corporations and individuals generally.

What inducement is there to do business for the payment of taxes and wages? Never was courage more necessary, and never was there a more discouraging tax bill. All business is speculation in a good sense. Speculators of that sort calculate closely the chances of their undertakings. When wages and taxes take nearly all, few will venture, and those who desperately venture under such conditions take a better chance of making conditions worse by their failure than of bettering conditions of capital and labor by their success. Congressmen will receive no praise because they have taken so many months to do so bad a job, and have taken such pains with what might so easily have been better done. They know their fault, because there are preparations by themselves to annul some parts of it voluntarily.

ROOSEVELT DAY.

The public judgment of the life and career of THEODORE ROOSEVELT was quickly formed, it will not be changed. The appreciations published at the time of his death showed a really remarkable agreement and unity of opinion. The universal note was one of high praise. There was candid recognition of the value of his great achievements, an equally general and evident purpose to dismiss with mere mention, always a kindly reference, those faults and peculiarities of temperament and manner which during his lifetime had stirred up so much contention. With their quick sense of relative values, the American people saw that Mr. ROOSEVELT'S faults were merely those of a strong man in vigorous action, that they were simply not worth remembering, certainly not worth talking about, at a time when all their minds were filled with a sense of what had been done for them, for the country, by one of their great men. "I "do not in the least object to a sport be-"cause it is rough," said Mr. ROOSEVELT in one of his speeches while he was still President of the United States. Into the noble strifes of politics and public life he carried much of the spirit of sport; he appeared actually to like even the roughness of the sport, and for that the people liked him. What mattered it that controversy raged around his name and his deeds? He could always hold his own, and although the strife was often heated and carried on by powerful opponents, even they have put aside the memory of it and now join in praising him.

In the commemorative eulogies pronounced all over the land today, this general agreement in the public estimate of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S career will be observed. As to the value of much that he attempted or achieved there may be differences of opinion, but there is universal assent that he accomplished two things, worthy to stand at the head of any list of his high achievements, for which he will live in the grateful memory of his countrymen. He stirred the public conscience to reprove and correct lapses from business morality, what he was accustomed to call the transgressions of men of great wealth; and he aroused the country, when there was need of an arousing, to the imperative duty of preparing for the national defense. He caused laws to be put upon the statute books, he insisted upon the enforcement of other laws, but most of all he made the country see, made his men of "great wealth" to see and understand, that great possessions must be used with due regard to the public welfare. He made the whole American people see and understand that mere bigness of territory and numbers does not constitute security from attack, that strength must be organized and disciplined if it is to avail in time of danger. Many other achievements must be put to the credit of Mr. ROOSEVELT, but these two in themselves are sufficient to entitle his name to a high place in the chronicles of constructive statesmanship.

Mr. ROOSEVELT spoke the thoughts that were in him with characteristic vigor and frankness. He at least did not use language to conceal thought. The spirit of the man, his character, aims, and purposes may be read clearly in his public utterances. In another part of this issue of THE TIMES we publish extracts from his speeches, writings, and official messages from which it would be possible to make a very good portrait of the man. He expounded his own rule and doctrine of life when he wrote "I wish to preach "not the doctrine of ignoble ease but the "doctrine of the strenuous life, the life of "toil and effort, of labor and strife; to "preach that highest form of success "which comes, not to the man who desires "mere ease and peace, but to the man who "does not shrink from danger, from hard-"ship, or from bitter toil, and who, out "of these, wins the splendid ultimate tri-"umph." That is THEODORE ROOSEVELT from the beginning to the end of his public career. He was intense in everything, and in nothing more than in his Americanism. How he flayed the hyphenated Americans! "We must insist "that there be in this country but one na-"tionality, the American nationality," he declared at the New York Republican Convention last July. "There can be "no fifty-fifty Americanism in this coun-"try." When he was criticising the Bench for the spirit of many of its decisions, insisting, in respect to the Judges, that "their whole training and "the aloofness of their position on the "Bench prevent their having, as a rule, "any real knowledge of, or understanding "sympathy with, the lives and needs of "the ordinary hard-working toiler," we may feel that he was unconsciously moved to this fervor of utterance by the contrast between the calm, studious, almost cloistered lives of Judges on the Bench with his own restless, strenuous life.

With his tremendous interest in affairs, and the breadth of his activities and enjoyments, it was inevitable that he should be an always overflowing fountain of ideas. He did not keep his ideas to himself, he was voluble and revealing in making them known to the public, in translating them into action. For that reason the reader of his writings in future time might construct not only a recognizable portrait of the man, but the very picture of the time in which he lived and strove; he might understand the currents of opinion, the changes in men's thoughts, the spiritual development of those nearly twoscore years in which Mr. ROOSEVELT was much of the time a massive and conspicuous figure. It can be said of THEODORE ROOSEVELT with much greater truth than of most men, that he will live in his deeds and words.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

The death on Wednesday last of Lieut. Gen. JOHN C. BATES, U. S. A., retired, in California reduced the number of distinguished veterans of the war with Spain to a very small band indeed. General SHAFTER, commander of the expeditionary force in Cuba, succumbed early. During the campaign he contracted malarial fever, calentura perniciosa, as the Cubans call it, and was never a sound man again. General JACOB FORD KENT, who commanded the First Infantry Division, died at Troy on Dec. 22, 1918, at the ripe age of eighty-three. General LAWTON, commander of the Second Infantry Division, paid for his scorn of the Filipino as an enemy. While carelessly exposing himself he was killed by a sharpshooter. General JOSEPH WHEELER of the dismounted cavalry division, after proving his loyalty and love of country by intrepid leadership in Cuba and the Philippines, passed away in this city in 1906. Of the brigade commanders in the Santiago campaign General HAMILTON S. HAWKINS, who led the infantry to the capture of San Juan Hill and was shot through the foot before reaching the crest, died in 1910. General ADNA R. CHAFFEE, who was LAWTON'S lieutenant in the taking of Caney, lived to see JOFFRE defeat the Germans in the first battle of the Marne, dying in California on Nov. 1, 1914. General WILLIAM LUDLOW, one of the most esteemed men in the army—he commanded the First Brigade of the Second Infantry Division at Caney—was a victim of tuberculosis at Convent, New Jersey, in 1901. General JOHN F. WESTON, the Chief Commissary of the expedition, died in the Bronx two years ago. He, like General SHAFTER, never recovered entirely from Cuban malaria, although he ended his career as commander of the army in the Philippines and lived for several years after reaching the retirement age. At Caney General BATES, who has just passed over to the majority, commanded an independent brigade.

Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. YOUNG, who helped WHEELER to win the first fight at Guasimas, is now living in Washington. Although seventy-nine, he is still active and useful. From 1909 to 1917 he served as Governor of the Soldiers' Home, and at the present time he is commander in chief of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion. General NELSON A. MILES, who commanded the expedition to Porto Rico, on his way calling at Santiago to give SHAFTER the benefit of his experience, is also living in Washington. By a year he is the senior of General YOUNG. General WESLEY MERRITT, who commanded the land forces in the Philippines in the war with Spain and later was a member of the peace conference, died in 1910. His able lieutenant, General ARTHUR MACARTHUR, who put down the Philippine rebellion, died in 1912.

All these soldiers were veterans of the civil war, and most of them were still in the prime of life when war was declared upon Spain. MILES commanded an army corps at twenty-five in the conflict between the States, and before LEE surrendered at Appomattox JOSEPH WHEELER, although under thirty, was ranking General in the Confederate cavalry and a famous soldier. SHAFTER, WESTON, and MACARTHUR won the Medal of Honor by extraordinary gallantry in the civil war. YOUNG, who rose to be a Lieutenant General in the regular army, enlisted as a private in 1861. CHAFFEE also began at the very bottom and reached the same rank. Both became Chief of Staff.

The late General BATES retired upon his own application in 1906, after forty years of service. He was Chief of Staff at the time. For two years he commanded districts in Mindanao, Jolo, and Southern Luzon, showing much executive ability. To him, as to all of his comrades of rank in Cuba, the Santiago campaign was more of an adventure, with a touch of the romantic in it, than the ordeal of war. They all made comparisons with the stirring and perilous times of the civil war. At Caney the casualties of BATES'S brigade were three killed and ten wounded, but it was in support, not in the thick of the fighting. Twelve hundred covered the entire losses of the Fifth Corps, which had a strength of about 15,000 men. The American force had only four light batteries in the field, in addition to four gatling guns and one pneumatic dynamite gun. The only object in the air remotely like an airplane was the buzzard, and there was no lack of that ill-favored and gluttonous bird. Looking back, it is hard to believe that an American army could have been so ill equipped, even in that day. But the regulars themselves were glorious—never was there a finer American army physically, the very flower of the nation. If the weapons in the hands of the enemy were no better and the casualty list was not heavy, the army was exposed to a climate that caused a long sick list and would have made fearful havoc in its ranks had it not been withdrawn within sixty days of the surrender of TORAL.

JOHN MURRAY III.

Something of the monumental pomp of age shines in "The Quarterly Review, "London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle "Street, 1919." Founded one hundred and ten years ago by JOHN MURRAY II., BYRON'S "anax [lord] of publishers," "the Emperor of the West," it is still the property of a dynasty of publishers whose Fleet Street days began in 1768, and which has flourished in the West End for more than a century. "The business of a publisher," JOHN MURRAY II. wrote to SCOTT, "is not in his shop or even in his connection, but in his brains." The Emperor is a gentleman, said SCOTT. Witty, of charming personality, man of ideas, whose enthusiasms were usually controlled by a sound commercial sense, JOHN MURRAY II. was the friend of many of the most salient personages of his time, COLERIDGE, BYRON, the publication of whose "Don Juan" he refused to continue; SOUTHEY, the DISRAELIS, CANNING, PEEL, GLADSTONE, CARLYLE—good must have been the dinners, engaging the host of even these few of a multitude of disparate eminences, many "gey ill to live wi'."

In the latest number of The Quarterly the present MURRAY, JOHN IV., pays a pious tribute to his father, JOHN III. "As I write," he tells us, "the fifth of "the name is commanding a battalion in "Flanders." A notable tradition, a bourgeois aristocracy. Solid must have been the business methods, able the administration that has handed down an honorable business to the fifth generation.

JOHN MURRAY III., less known than his father, succeeded to the business in 1843, and had to build it up. His father had paid and lived too well. As a student at Edinburgh in 1827 he heard Sir WALTER SCOTT publicly avow for the first time the authorship of the Waverley novels to "a mixed company, many of them not of the most respectable order." Well, one could forgive himself for venturing into not the most respectable society—it seems that many of the no better than the wicked class of actors were present—to have heard that avowal; and we are to remember that JOHN was only a boy, in the most respectable and thirsty of capitals. He met Mrs. SIDDONS and "a Mr. AUDUBON." Likewise DUGALD STEWART, a metaphysician, whose company was doubtless more respectable and tedious than that of the ungodly at the Theatrical Dinner. It was at Captain BASIL HALL'S—have the Americans altogether forgotten the ingenuous, irascible Captain?—that he saw Mr. AUDUBON. He became a respectable geologist, a traveler who in the 20's and 30's went abroad strange countries for to see and who invented the immortal Hand Books, the Red Books that educated or bored three generations of British travelers. He met GOETHE "in a brown dressing "gown, beneath which shone the brilliant "whiteness of a clean shirt, a refinement "not usual among German philosophers." To travel for the purpose of writing handbooks must be charming, if one does not forget the wines and dishes of each place in the "art treasures," for the inspection of which handbooks seem too largely calculated.

He knew old METTERNICH in Bohemia as a swell, in England as a refugee. JOHN WILSON CROKER, Tory, defamed by the inveterate Whig caricaturist MACAULAY, as by DISRAELI, THACKERAY, and Lady MORGAN, was another friend. THACKERAY, who drew "Mr. Wenham" after his idea of CROKER, learned that the wicked one and his wife used to ask Indian boys to spend the holidays with them, wept, apologized to Mrs. CROKER. An anecdote supplementary to "The Book of Snobs." DISRAELI wouldn't tell JOHN III. why he had turned CROKER into "Rigby." JOHN MURRAY IV. can find the reason in the Moneypenny-Buckle "Life of Disraeli."

MOTLEY, GROTE, ARTHUR STANLEY, Sir CHARLES LYELL, Sir RODERICK MURCHISON, DAVID LIVINGSTONE, LAYARD, SCHLIEMANN, were of JOHN III.'s friends. GLADSTONE we see as himself again inventing Greek, and refusing to accept the result of arbitration as to the meaning of a Greek word to which the discoverer of so many superimposed Iliums attached a particular meaning. It was Mr. GLADSTONE'S privilege to know everything by intuition.

Here is PAUL DU CHAILLU, fresh from his dwarfs and gorillas, and generally regarded as a Munchausen. His chief assailant, JOHN IV. tells us, was a British Museum assistant who couldn't pronounce the letter v and who announced the subject of his lecture to a scientific society as "the wertical slit in the wisual organs of wenomous wipers." All children liked PAUL. All hated GEORGE BORROW, who "used to come to "us with a frown and say 'I will scratch "your face.' We called him the Scratchy "Man." WHEWELL and BORROW, both "husky" and violent, nearly came to blows at a dinner party, and "Mrs. WHEWELL was carried fainting out of the room."

Good old vivid folk! We can't look at half of them; but boys whose youth was nurtured on the manuals and dictionaries of Dr. WILLIAM SMITH can here forgive and admire that indefatigable antiquary; and Lord ROBERT CECIL, the Marquis of SALISBURY that was to be, is a sympathetic figure as he works for a younger son's wages on this same old famous Quarterly.

POETRY EN MASSE.

In an introduction to a recent volume of sketches of contemporary poets—a form of literary hagiology which is becoming more common—Mr. PERCY MACKAYE calls upon poets to get together. Not in any vulgar labor-union way, to agitate for a uniform wage of a dollar a line; but to get together artistically. They have been hermits, he says, "in a "time the most co-operative the earth "has ever known. In no choral an age, "shall the poets still be solitary pipers?"

Not if he has his way. The work of our poets must be focused, and Mr. MACKAYE would focus it "through the defi-"nite, creative processes of community "poetry." To the enthusiastic eye there will leap the spectacle of fourteen thousand people gathered together in Madison Square Garden for the purpose of composing the perfect sonnet—surely the triumph of democracy in art; but it appears that that is not exactly what he means. Instead of poetry of and by the community, he would have only poetry for the community, in so far as poetry is understood as meaning merely the spoken or written word. The poet furnishes poetry, and the community amplifies it with a background in a form of art in which Mr. MACKAYE himself has won much distinction, the community masque.

He admits that a good many poets of our time seem to themselves and others to be lyric rather than dramatic; but they have the stuff of which masque writers are made. Indeed, many of them have written dramas in verse. "Some of these, while yet unpublished, I "have at times been privileged to hear "read aloud by their authors to intimate "gatherings of friends." A kindly friend and kindly poet, Mr. MACKAYE! The younger PLINY, writing two thousand years ago in a time when every educated man wrote verse and compelled his friends to come and listen while he recited it, expressed a different emotion, and one which can be appreciated today. Perhaps Rome fell because her great men were so busy listening to one another's poetry that they had no time to govern the empire. In our own time there is no greater bore than the poet who insists on bringing his works to what Mr. MACKAYE calls "a quiet fireside"—meaning quiet before the poet came—in order to get his friends' opinions as to why nobody will print his sonnets or produce his tragedy in blank verse.

Mr. MACKAYE seems to think it is amazing that these lyric dramas have never enjoyed a properly communal production. Some of the rest of us may think otherwise. A community masque includes pageantry, scenery—usually out-of-doors—color, music, action, and words—"poetry" in the narrow sense. It may be an ungracious comment on the views of a poet who, like Mr. MACKAYE, has been very successful with these enterprises, but the average member of the audience is likely to think that in this particular art form the words are of all factors the least important. Consider a distinguished example, Mr. MACKAYE'S own Shakespeare masque played here three years ago. The words had no effect on a great part of the audience for the excellent reason that they could seldom be heard. Individuals and choruses might as well have been appearing in pantomime for all that most of the audience got out of them. But color, costumes, scenery, music, dancing—these could reach every spectator, and carried a less explicit, and consequently a more general, appeal.

For if you want community art—and not art by and for a class, even if a large class, of the community—you must get something that will as nearly as possible produce an emotional effect on every one. Color and music, dancing and action, will do this; words are not so likely to do it, and particularly words unfamiliar to the multitude and cast in unfamiliar sequence, which are disappearing from current poety but seem to linger longest in the poetic drama. Community art will be furthered not by imposing art on the community, but by finding what the community is already interested in and developing the artistic possibilities latent in this. Mr. MACKAYE might study the movies with profit—both to himself and to the movies. As for words, whether in verse or in prose, they can hardly be trusted to appeal to those who cannot get some comprehension of the thought clothed in them; and the majority in our communities is hardly so far along just yet.

THE GERMAN WELCOME

And Its Effect on the Americans Along the Rhine.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Alarming reports are in circulation regarding the attitude taken by many of our returning soldiers toward England and France. Some publicity has of course been given to the feeling against England, and it has, doubtless correctly, been analyzed as the result of insidious German propaganda. The attitude of many of the later arrivals from overseas indicates clearly, however, that German effort has not been confined to creating a feeling against England, but has also succeeded in pointing out the faults of those other noble allies, the French. More than that, our boys, many of them, have discovered many beautiful and lovable traits about the German people, with whom they have been associated in their short period of German occupation. Whether or not each individual report is true in every detail, there seems no doubt that much harm is being done.

Having had the fortune, or rather misfortune, to spend a considerable time in Germany, I feel privileged to briefly state my analysis of the present condition. Germany at first did not believe we could get enough men trained and "Over there" to materially affect the outcome. Secondly, if we did get them there, our "boys" would not know how and would not dare to fight. But when they showed how true-blue specimens of real manhood could fight, and would fight, Germany saw very quickly the necessity of adopting a different policy. The result was, of course, the armistice, dictated not by military superiority nor by economic conditions within Germany, but solely by the realization that a different method of fighting was needed to meet these Americans.

Then, of course, came the welcome into Germany of the fine, good-hearted, gentle but unsuspecting Americans. Even German homes are attractive to young fellows who have been away for months, many of them for the first time, living in trenches and among ruins. Hospitality is a highroad to the heart.

So far the plan has apparently worked. Shall we allow it to succeed?

AMERICANS ALL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some time during the last year you published a statement from one of your correspondents dealing with the nationality of the New York high school students who received special mention by reason of scholarship. It is possible that you may be interested in a piece of information which has just come to hand relative to the nationality of high school students in Hawaii. One of the classes now in the Hilo High School contains twenty-six students who are classified according to race (not nationality, for all of these are American citizens by right of birth) as follows: Japanese, 11; Hawaiian or part Hawaiian, 3; Portuguese, 1; Chinese or part Chinese, 5; Scotch, 3; German, 1; American, 3. Some of these are counted twice because of a mixture of races. Without giving the data covering all of the high schools in Hawaii, I can say that the proportion is fairly typical. All of the students above referred to are preparing for college, and no account is taken of the general or commercial students. The majority of the students attending college from this high school select either the University of California or Stanford University. Before me I have the reports of these two universities in which are compiled the records of the freshman classes for a period of years grouped according to the high schools sending graduates to each institution. From these reports I find that, out of nearly 300 school represented, Hilo High School stands well within the first ten in scholarship. This may be of interest to students of education as well as to students of race differences in our Republic.

PROHIBITION LAWS TESTED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When Horatio Seymour was Governor of New York, sixty-five years ago, a condition similar to that which obtains today on the question of prohibition agitated the people of the State. The Governor vetoed the passage of a law preventing the manufacture and sale of liquor in New York State on the ground of its unconstitutionality. Governor Seymour based his objection on the right given to the police to invade the privacy of American homes for purposes of search. During the administration following that of Seymour a similar bill was introduced, passed, and signed by the Governor. A cry arose at once for the repeal of the obnoxious measure. The people awoke from a state of stupor and discovered themselves to be robbed of their liberties. The matter came before the courts and the Judges pronounced the act unconstitutional. They based their decision on the points taken by Governor Seymour as to the invasion of public rights and liberties.

THE NEW JUGOSLAVIA.

Professor Prince Sees a Bright Future for the Nation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this country the highest hopes are entertained for the future of the Southern Slavonic State which has been formed recently as the "Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes." The population is largely homogenous, nearly all the three peoples using essentially the same language, the Serbo-Croatian. There are religious differences, but these count now for little, and will count less as times goes on.

The new State will, I firmly believe, have a prosperous existence, as the Serbs, on the one hand, and the Croats and Slovenes on the other, supplement each other most admirably. The Serbs still live in the heroic age. Their spiritual food for 400 years has been their own rugged but beautiful literature handed down by their loyal musicians and bards. They are essentially agriculturists, herdsmen, and foresters, mountaineers of a highly poetical temperament, while the Croats and Slovenes are artisans, sailors, and business men. There could not be a more promising union of peoples.

The people of the United States have always been friendly to the Serb nationality, which is the one Slavonic combination at the present moment for whose stability we may hope with certainty. Our news is too scanty regarding the Czechoslovaks or the Poles to enable us to predict anything as to their future. Russia, of course, is hopeless for the present, as it is becoming more and more evident that she must work through her terrible disease of bloodshed by herself. Nothing short of a world intervention could save her at this moment, and it is highly unlikely that such an intervention will be undertaken by the war-weary allied nations. Russia will eventually recover and stabilize herself, but she must first rid herself of the foul virus bred by her own rotten body politic. The course of a national disorder is very like that of a bodily disease which may cure itself by the formation of a healthy counter-virus, and for this we must hope in Russia. America must look chiefly to the Southern Slavs, the Rumanians, and the Greeks as the most important factors in the future Southern European concert. When Rr. Rathenau of the German General Electric Company said bitterly that we have "Balkanized" Europe he spoke better than he knew, for I have faith that "Balkanization" by the Serbs, Croats, and Slovens can only be fraught with good results.

NEW RESPONSIBILITIES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The people in America should be glad and proud to realize that President Woodrow Wilson occupies nearly every thought among the allied nations. There is no question that he is "making good." He has succeeded in starting the peace negotiations on a much higher plane than might have been thought possible only a few months ago. He has good cards in his hand, and hitherto he has turned his tricks in masterly fashion. One serious difficulty confronts him, and that is the New World, having once come to redress the balance of the Old, will find it almost impossible to withdraw and leave Europe to settle her own international problems. For instance, unless America undertakes the tutelage of Turkey in Europe and Asia there is sure to be trouble. To prevent dissension the United States will probably take over the task of settling the new interests in the East.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As China's diplomatic history shows, she has never failed to observe her international pledge. If she now declares that the treaty of 1915 made under the coercion of Japan is null and void, her intention is simply that of Rumania in her renunciation of the treaties of Brest and Bucharest. We certainly realize that it is to the interest of Japan that China should be kept silent at this moment. But it does not appear fair to China and the world that the wrongs China suffered from Japan are not to be righted.

China prefers to be left alone. She will be able to work out her own salvation and needs no external help.

SELF-DETERMINATION FOR IRELAND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If our Sinn Fein friends really mean what they say, and are merely asking for their rights to determine for themselves whether they shall belong to England or not, let them prove the honesty and sincerity of their belief by allowing all parts of Ireland, each for itself, to decide upon their future connections, just as the various parts of Austria have decided and are deciding. There is just as much difference between Ulster and the rest of Ireland as there is between the various composite parts that made up the former Austro-Hungarian monarchy.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Gone is Ulysses! From his native shores,
Which knew and loved his tread, his bark has pushed,
Urging a path through waves unknown.
Gone is Ulysses! How his eager soul,
Forever questing where high virtue gleamed,
Led us to newer conquests, further peaks
From which our eyes beheld still wider views!
He gave us vision when our souls were cold;
Gave us then most ardent zeal for truth,
For justice, for our nation's name and fame!
Gone is Ulysses! Have we heart to sing
His perfect praise? One fine memorial—
His race's reverent love—attests his worth;
"Most blameless he," and so he needs not praise.
"Death closes all"? Ah, no: to such an one
Death brings new life—if here or there, who knows?
One thing is sure: his purpose holds for us.
That newer world he sought is ours to seek—
A world of justice, kindness, and truth,
Founded on steadfast honor, swept by airs
Of purest freedom. This, when he is gone,
He leaves to us, a priceless legacy—
A lodestar! Let us follow it, and him!

BELGIAN CLAIMS

Freedom of the Scheldt and Addition of Dutch Limburg and Luxemburg

By CLIFFORD N. CARVER.

THE terms of peace that will satisfy Belgium have already been much discussed, and at different times since 1914 various rumors have floated about as to Belgian stipulations. The Belgians have fought valiantly and suffered terribly, and they should be compensated, not only because it will make them strong, but also because their strength will protect Europe and civilization against any renewal of the German barbarism and piracy. The Peace Conference must of necessity take great care in readjusting boundaries, and their obvious work must include drawing Belgium's boundaries with Germany so that the proper protection may be afforded the Belgians—the importance to the world of a strengthened Belgium does not need to be argued. The three following problems, each a factor of the maximum importance in the consideration of this work, will undoubtedly be presented during those preliminary conferences which are of such importance and during the Peace Conference itself:

1. The freedom of the River Scheldt.
2. Dutch Limburg.
3. The Grand Duchy of Luxemburg.

In the discussion and consideration of these questions so vitally affecting this kingdom, Belgium should not be misjudged nor should the impression be gained as to these problems having resulted from mercenary desires on her own part.

In the first case, Antwerp being the single port of importance in Belgium, the freedom of the Scheldt becomes immediately a necessity for the military protection and the commercial life of the kingdom. This fact has in itself been proved with horrible emphasis by the tragedy which followed the loss of Antwerp in this war, a tragedy by which civilization has suffered. Free entry of ships of war, and otherwise, must be allowed Antwerp, both for defensive and strategic reasons, if for no others. For this case two solutions are offered, either of which would provide a future for Antwerp and a relief for Belgium. The first solution would consider the cession by Holland of the land itself, either on one or both sides of the Scheldt. Whereas, the north bank of the river is entirely Dutch, the south bank is half Catholic, and its inhabitants have already come to regard themselves as being under foreign domination owing to their distance from the Dutch. In fact, the peoples of this country are scarcely even influenced by Holland, and depend entirely upon Belgian interests; their neglect by the Dutch has been continuous and is undoubtedly the principal reason causing their desire to join their lot with that of Belgium.

The second solution would provide for such codominion of the Scheldt as is essential. It must of necessity differ considerably from the present arrangement whereby the Dutch are naturally influenced in their decisions by their desire to favor Rotterdam and Amsterdam. It should, indeed, be made possible to apply the theory of the "freedom of the seas" to the navigation of this river as well as to the vital problem of the high seas. This and the second case are, of course, debatable points—the debate arises from the fact that the contention is not between the Allies and the Central Powers, but between the Allies and a neutral power, Holland. It should, however, be the duty of the Peace Conference to determine what will be the fairest arrangement to insure peace among all mankind. Belgium must have geographical safety and economic independence—her frontier as it is now drawn leaves her dangerously unprotected.

In the second case the problem of Dutch Limburg has always existed since its loss by Belgium in 1839—its mere existence as a Dutch province gives a comparatively easy access into Belgium. Half of the River Meuse is Dutch and half is Belgian. These communities are Belgian in tradition, and to a great extent in their sentiments and desires—their people are poor and Holland's interest in them has been at all times lacking. Especially means of transportation are insufficient on account of the strange shape that territory has been given. Everywhere one comes upon witnesses to the former suzerainty of Belgium and the former influences of that country. The recent retreat of the German armies through this territory points out the military importance of the question. Belgium must indeed be allowed proper frontiers to safeguard her from a repetition of the German aggression.

In the third case Luxemburg presents again a military problem, as well as one of social and political importance. In this case the Peace Conference might appoint an impartial commission to discover the status of the population—true expression of preference between French and Belgian suzerainty has become a necessity.

Luxemburg must assuredly retain its autonomy and the decision as to where it will unite should be with the State. These are considerations more pressing even than geography. Luxemburg cannot be left under German rule, as it has been since 1867, and once made free from German influence, it cannot be left alone, from both a political and an economic standpoint. It cannot be united with a great power like France without being absorbed. The only natural solution is some kind of union with Belgium, to which until 1839 it belonged for more than four centuries. The ability of each State, whether large or small, to determine its own destiny to the fullest extent compatible with the peace, prosperity, and freedom of all has been one of the aims of this war. Whereas, the French Government has formally declared its lack of desire to influence Luxemburg in this decision, she secretly encourages all movements made with such a purpose. In this the rigid and historical argument will apply, and the cogent fact appears to be that these peoples feel Belgian and wish to unite with Belgium; Teutonic strains are sprinkled in the country, but the racial basis is Belgian, and remains Belgian. Is this in fact not a problem similar to that of "Italia Irredenta"? And should this country not be redeemed and be restored to its mother country as "Italia Irredenta" must and will go to Italy?

THE PEACE OF THE ADRIATIC

Washington, Feb. 4, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with great interest Mr. Savic's eminently moderate and reasonable letter in your issue of today's date. He is perfectly right, I am sure, in his contention that if the representatives of the new kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes and the representatives of Italy got together around a table they could solve the Adriatic question in twenty-four hours and present to the Peace Conference a scheme of settlement that would meet with universal approval.

It cannot be that a country which produced Garibaldi, Mazzini, and Cavour can ever lend itself to any scheme of political oppression. The grandson of "il re galantuomo" could never place himself in the "Hapsburg class." As long as history endures the world will thrill with the story of the "Thousand of Marsala," and the history of the Italian "risorgimento" is one of the glories of the nineteenth century. It is, therefore, impossible to believe that the people which made a noble struggle for liberty will ever become, in its turn, a nation of oppressors.

Italy's nervousness regarding her position on the Adriatic is merely a survival of a state of affairs which did little credit to Europe and should pass away with the disappearance of the causes which created it. It was this nervousness which led to the concluding of the unfortunate secret treaty of London.

What were Italy's reasons for concluding the treaty? They were twofold. She had, as her direct adversary, the Austrian Empire which held the Jugoslav country and the littoral of the Adriatic. Behind Austria was Germany, with her Pan Germanic ambitions. Their realization meant the creation of "Mitteleuropa," which would have reduced Italy to the position of a second-rate power, granting that, after a German victory, there were any "powers" left. Italy had, however, to reckon with yet another possibility, and that was that the war would end in a kind of "stalemate"; that Germany and Austria would fail to achieve their entire program; that a bastard peace would be negotiated, and that the Central Powers would still remain a menace. As the resumption of the struggle would, under such circumstances, be inevitable and only a matter of time, Italy would be justified in assuring herself of every strategic advantage she could obtain. As under such circumstances Jugoslavia would have failed to secure its independence, it would not even have existed as a political entity, and could not claim the consideration it today can do.

Then came the second hypothesis, the complete triumph of the Allies, with Russia still remaining an autocracy, and, potentially, the greatest military power in the world. Russia's first task would be to secure the independence of all the Slav races of Germany and Austria—that is to say, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Jugoslavia. This would mean the triumph of Pan Germanism replaced by the triumph of Pan Slavism. In stating this I am putting forward the most extreme case. Personally I do not believe that even if Russia had survived the ordeal of the war she would have still been an autocracy and continued her militaristic ambitions, but I am, for the moment, adopting the Italian point of view.

Under these circumstances Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia would have been the outposts of Pan Slavism. Italy would not have had to do with a small Jugoslavia of thirteen millions but with a State which had behind it an empire of 300,000,000. With Russia in possession of Constantinople and the Dardanelles this might mean the appearance of Russia on the scene as a Mediterranean power. The fear of such a contingency might induce Italy, for political and strategic reasons, to seize a territory to which she had and has, at bottom, no valid claim.

But all these motives and considerations have passed away forever. Austria has been completely dismembered and no longer is a menace. Russia has got rid of its autocracy, and with the autocracy went militarism, imperialism, and Pan Slavism. There is no longer any menace to Italy on the Adriatic from any side, least of all from Jugoslavia. On the contrary everything goes to show that a newly created Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes is the natural ally of Italy, its best bulwark against any revival of Pan Germanism.

Italy therefore runs no risks in abandoning her claims to annex Jugoslav territory and enslave, in the name of a security which is no longer menaced, a population of 750,000 Jugoslavs. It is the duty of every Italian who has the good name of his country at heart to prevent the crime against humanity being committed. If this should not be done then the war has been fought in vain and we will go back to the bad old ruling principle.

> And let him take who has the power,
> And let him keep who can.

If the world war is to end in a mere scramble for plunder, then the sooner the Peace Conference closes its doors the better, as its labors would only be a solemn farce.

New Jersey and the Port.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The unifying of the Port of New York is a matter of so much moment that it is a pity any misunderstanding should arise as to the good faith of the high contracting parties. New Jersey has systematically given its adhesion to the scheme of unification by a vehicular tunnel, and has passed legislation making possible the provision of $6,000,000, which General Goethals estimated as one-half the cost of construction. After a conference with the New York Chamber of Commerce by Governor Edge of New Jersey, a bill was promoted by which the New York-New Jersey Port and Harbor Development Commission came into existence, and, in agreement with Governor Whitman of New York, it was arranged that each Legislature should appropriate $100,000 a year for two years in order that this commission might make a thorough and effective survey.

New Jersey is at present striving to arrange with New York for a continuance of the work of the commission, and the State of New Jersey has already made its arrangements toward securing the funds necessary for the construction of the tunnel. The work will be carried out, and the efforts made by New Jersey certainly convey the idea of the utmost activity and enthusiasm to make the tunnel an accomplished fact. No serious objections to the prospect were ever made in New Jersey, which has all along exhibited a readiness to get along with the work.

NEW JERSEY.

New York, Jan. 20, 1919.

FROM A JUGOSLAV SOLDIER.

An Account of Recent Events in the Territory Claimed by Italy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE NEW YORK TIMES was the first of the great American journals to lend its support to the Jugoslav cause, thereby aiding in no small degree the Jugoslav revolt, one of the chief causes of the German collapse. Prompted by your impartial and broad-minded treatment of the Jugoslav question, I beg to take advantage of the hospitality of your columns to place before the American thinking public the matter of the Adriatic contention, which, considering the allied program of self-determination and the principle of nationality, should never have arisen.

Jugoslavia, freed and united, immediately concentrated her efforts on organizing the new State and clearing away the obstacles left by Austrian misrule. The prevailing spirit was that every man should put his shoulder to the wheel, to make of Jugoslavia an example of progress and democracy.

Jugoslav liberty and unity, however, lasted but three days. The third day found Italy pouring troops into Istria and Dalmatia, occupying Trieste and Fiume, with the plausible explanation that they were there merely to keep order, quite an unnecessary measure, as there were no signs of disorder, together with which there were sufficient Serbian soldiers at hand for this purpose, having come at the direct entreaty of the inhabitants. Still, the Jugoslav National Council was loath to believe that Italy was acting with designs against Jugoslav integrity, but subsequent events have shown that the Italian occupation was not merely a precautionary measure but a direct invasion of Jugoslav territory with the object of annexation. The Jugoslav fleet was seized. The inhabitants of the occupied districts were informed that only Italian was to be spoken, Croatian being strictly forbidden.

The Jugoslav newspapers have been suppressed, or else censored to such an extent that little but the name of the paper remains. Even a short paragraph in English, welcoming American sailors in the name of the Jugoslavs without touching on the political situation, was deleted by the censor. The national emblems and cockades, worn by all Jugoslavs since their liberation, are torn from the wearers and destroyed by the Italian military police.

This method of "keeping order" has so enraged the people that fights between the Italian soldiers and Jugoslavs are the order of the day. It is evident that Italy's plan is to give the occupied districts an Italian aspect, and nothing has been left undone to carry out this deception. Needless to say, the national indignation and ire has been aroused, while the inhabitants of the districts directly concerned are praying that American, British, and French troops may be sent to replace the Italians (if troops there must be!) and at the same time state openly that if they are to be torn from Jugoslavia, Austrian misrule would be preferable to the rule of Italy.

Italy's attitude is all the more regrettable from the Jugoslav point of view, inasmuch as this young people is but little known, and an uninformed public influenced by the strong Italian anti-Jugoslav propaganda is apt to attribute the present situation to the bellicose character of the nation. Nothing could be further from the truth. Through the whole war Jugoslavia has striven against German and Austro-German militarism, and a permanent peace is the only wish of the people.

From an allied point of view, Italy's imperialistic policy is, to put it mildly, unpardonable. In the first place, she promises to hinder the speedy return to peace conditions, and even to delay European demobilization. Further, in placing these Jugoslavs under her rule, she is setting a deadly obstacle in the path of the League of Nations, which can only be formed among free peoples, in fact, she is already preparing the way for further bloodshed. As history shows, the Jugoslavs are not the type of people to watch quietly their liberty being snatched away from them without a word of protest, and it is certain that if words are ineffectual, their protest will take a more material and sterner form.

It is unlikely that Italy will dispute the fact that the Jugoslavs greatly outnumber the Italians in the occupied territory, but should she do so, then an impartial census must be taken by allied representatives, for while the Italians remain in occupation the true facts can be ascertained in no other way. Jugoslavia relies upon the United States, Great Britain, and France to remember that they fought under the banner of self-determination and that Italy will be informed that she must occupy and content herself with all that is Italian—and nothing more.

AMERICANIZATION.

Governor Carey of Wyoming Favors Action by Congress.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Complying with your request I am setting forth my ideas on the proposed action by Congress to Americanize our foreign and illiterate inhabitants:

The complete transformation of the foreign-born element into loyal and successful American citizens is mainly a question of acquainting them with American ideals and customs. To accomplish this we should offer the immigrant every opportunity to learn the English language, opening special classes in evening schools for adults and requiring all schools to teach in the English language. We should avoid all appearances of undue coercion.

The States and the Federal Government should assist and support local organizations which have as their object the Americanization of aliens. In this manner much duplication of effort can be avoided.

As long as we continue to have in our midst representatives of races who do not master the English language and whose ideals are antagonistic to our own, so long there will be friction and ill feeling. Therefore the proposed action by Congress to Americanize our foreign and illiterate inhabitants is a step in the right direction.

Greeley Square.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to call to your attention the fact that a movement is on foot to change the name of Greeley Square. Some years ago Typographical Union No. 6, together with Typographical Union No. 98 and Horace Greeley Post G. A. R., raised the funds for a statue to Greeley and had it erected in Greeley Square.

Horace Greeley, the eminent printer, publisher, and editor, was among New York's most distinguished citizens, and it was through the efforts of Typographical Union No. 6, of which he was the first President, that Greeley Square received its name. We enter a protest against this contemplated move.

"MANDATARY" and "MANDATORY"

A Confusion in Words That Has Arisen with the League of Nations

By PROFESSOR MUNROE SMITH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Without questioning your assertion that diplomatists have a weakness for long and sonorous words—a foible exhibited in other professions—I may point out that the use, in international law, of the word "mandatary" is to be explained by the fact that the foundations of modern international law were laid, and most of the earlier books on the subject were written, by Continental European lawyers, who thought and wrote in terms of Roman private law, which was their common law. In Roman private law a "mandate" is what English lawyers call a "commission of agency" or a "power of attorney." The person commissioned and empowered, whom English lawyers call an "agent" or an "attorney in fact," was described by the Romans as a "procurator." In the middle ages, because the term "procurator" had come to be applied to various secular and ecclesiastical officers, the Continental lawyers coined the term "mandatarius" to describe the private-law agent. In French law he is a "mandataire," and similar words are used in the other Romance languages.

In modern international law the word "mandate" has long been used to describe a commission given by the Society of Nations (usually by an International Congress) to a particular State; and the State so commissioned is called the "mandatary." In the earlier part of the last century, for example, a Quadruple Alliance of European Powers—ostensibly a league to preserve peace, but really a league to make the world safe for autocracy—commissioned the France of Louis XVIII. to suppress a Spanish revolution and the Austria of Metternich to execute similar "mandates" in Italy. However objectionable the purpose, the method was effective; the "mandataries" did their work promptly and thoroughly.

The substantive "mandatary" (there is no such adjective) has not infrequently been used by English writers, and is rightly defined in the best English dictionaries. It has, however, never been thoroughly acclimated in English-speaking countries.

In English, however, we have long had the adjective "mandatory," which seems to be of purely English nativity. There is no corresponding adjective either in Latin or in French. In Roman public law, a mandate issued by a magistrate was more than an authorization, it was a command. In non-legal Latin, the word was often used in the same sense. So English writers coined the adjective "mandatory," meaning "having the character of a command."

When English writers have used the noun "mandatary" in the sense of "agent," they have sometimes spelled it like the adjective. In English dictionaries "mandatory" is given as a variant form of the noun. This has perhaps contributed to the confusion now reigning in the American press. "Mandatary," usually spelled with an o, is treated as either a noun or an adjective. In the last few days I have several times seen the grotesque phrase "mandatory agent." If this phrase is used to describe a State commissioned to act for a league of nations, it is tautological, for it means an agent who has the character of an agent; but on account of the meaning usually attached to the English adjective, such a phrase may easily suggest that an international "mandate" given to a single State is something more than an authorization, and must be accepted. This has never been true; and no such notion, so far as I am aware, is today entertained by any responsible statesman. The first of the delegates to the Paris Congress to suggest that the proposed League of Nations should intrust the execution of some of its policies to particular "mandataries" seems to have been General Smuts, and in his plan the acceptance of a "mandate" by any State is to be voluntary.

Another misleading phrase now often used is "mandatory rule," which is capable of several wrong interpretations, each of them more obvious than what is really meant, "rule by a mandatary."

If the journalist, unlike the diplomatist, objects to unnecessary polysyllables, why should he use them? If he wishes to make himself intelligible to the man in the street, why should he not substitute for strange words familiar words that have exactly the same meaning? Much misunderstanding would be avoided if our American journalists, correspondents, and editors would turn "mandate" into "commission" or "authorization," "giving a mandate" into "commissioning" or "authorizing," and "mandatary" into "agent." If the word "mandatary" has to be used, it should be spelled with three a's, not so much because this spelling is historically more correct as for the very practical purpose of avoiding, or at least lessening, confusion and misunderstanding.

ANGLO-AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP

NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The attention of the writer has been called to the effort which is being made in so many directions to produce an unnecessary antagonism between America and England. Whether German propaganda, Irish hatred, or our own school histories, it matters not, the harm is being done, and to avert its continuance I appeal first that the school histories of the Revolutionary period be rewritten with the light which this great world war throws upon the ways of German monarchs, and by rewriting our Revolutionary period history abolish the early impression which every American child has of England. It was not England, it was a superimposed German method on England which we clearly see today, after the revelations of this fearful war, and this revision must be put into the children's histories that they may know the entire truth.

Had England remained true to type, and not have been governed by a German despot, how different would have been the course of events. What was at the time a calamity for England, was, when by her German King George III.'s misrule, we, as a colony, were lost to her forever, and by this failure England learned to govern her colonies, and has so made her great British Empire, or, as General Smuts calls it, "her great British Commonwealth." It was another German King of England, George I., whose inability to speak the English language forced her to a most important act, namely, to put most of the Government business in the hands of Ministers, and this led to the development of the British Cabinet.

To understand fully the turn of events in these two respects, viz., a German King on the English throne, George I., forcing an English Cabinet, and a German King on the English throne, George III., driving us from the motherland—we must think a moment of good Queen Anne dying in 1714—a Protestant and childless, and by a pre-coronation agreement the nearest Protestant heir was to succeed her. Her nephews, the two pretenders, were both alive, but being Roman Catholics, were not eligible; so George, the son of James I.'s granddaughter, Sophia, who had married the elector of Hanover, was made King of England, as George I. His grandson, brought up by a German mother, narrow-minded and illiterate, "to be a King," gave to England George III., whom Trevelyan describes as "five centuries behind his time, and was 'a drill sergeant'—a nonrepresentative ruler who held the reins and obstinately drove counter to national conscience." Another historian writes, "The name of George II. cannot be penned without a pang, can hardly be penned without a curse, such mischief was he fated to do the country." Filling his Cabinet with men who would only take orders from him, deliberately subverting the constitutional practice of England, is it unnatural that events followed as they did?

We Americans do not emphasize enough that a strong current ran with us in England during all the years of our making as a nation. When, in 1782, and contrary to the British Nation's habit, they voted to back out of what they regarded as a just quarrel and to abandon all attempt to reconquer America (as the King, George III., was set upon doing) on the ground "that it was both wrong and foolish," it gives an irresistible proof that a majority of English people must all along have felt persuaded that the coercion of the Colonists was neither wise nor righteous.

Lord Barrington and Lord Shelbourne objected to the procedure, and the latter resigned from the Cabinet when war vessels were sent to Boston. The Duke of Grafton was removed from his office of Lord Privy Seal for telling George III. that he and his Ministers were deluded.

The Potsdam ways and means were pre-acted in London in these revolutionary days. In both houses Lords Chatham and Camden, Duke of Richmond, Lord Shelbourne, Edmund Burke, John Wilkes, Generals Conway and Denning, Charles James Fox, and scores of others, with conviction and pertinacity, pleaded in favor of reason and moderation. All over England these views were repeated by vigorous and well-informed journalists. "The empire," said a paper in 1775, "is under a bigoted and vindictive prince whose administration is odious and corrupt in every part." A London paper, eulogizing General Washington at length, concluded "there is not a King in Europe but would look like a valet de chambre by his side."

The Earl of Chatham proposed that Parliament should ask the King to take speedy and effectual measures to cease hostilities and make a treaty to restore peace and liberty to America. The Duke of Richmond said, "I do not consider the people of America to be in rebellion; they are resisting acts of unexampled cruelty and oppression."

Many English officers withdrew from service rather than fight, as Lord Pitt said "our fellow-subjects in America." Sir William Howe told the Parliament "that the whole British Army would not be numerous enough to conquer America," and said if he were ordered to command it, he would not scruple to refuse it. When the King, by royal command, ordered him, he felt his military oath required obedience. Colonel Burgoyne confessed half-heartedness to serve against the Colonies, and Admiral Keppel refused to fight American Colonists.

A common language in which traditions and literary classics are owned, preserved, and reversed, is a strong bond of natural unity. The real England spoke to America through Alfred Tennyson in 1852:

> Gigantic daughter of the West,
> We drink to thee across the flood;
> We know the most we love the best,
> For art thou not of English blood?
> Should war's mad blast again be blown,
> Permit not thou the tyrant's power
> To fight thy mother here alone,
> But let thy broadsides roar with ours.
> Hands all around.
> God the tyrant's cause confound
> To our great kinsman in the West,
> And the great cause of freedom
> Round and round.

In his maiden speech in London, as American Ambassador to Great Britain, John W. Davis, when he said, "It is on the firm rock of friendship and understanding between the English-speaking peoples that the foundations of a League of Nations must be laid," expressed more than a diplomatic courtesy. He sees the English-speaking nations on top, not by selfish intent, so much as by inescapable fate, possibly divine ordinance. This power they will use openly and fairly to all the world.

America and Great Britain have a heritage in common. Our political and governmental ideals, our political life is as much the offspring of England as is Canada's, Australia's or any other part of the British Empire. Our political systems (which have attracted our enormous emigration from Europe), we took from England. When the Cavaliers and Puritans came to this continent they did not have to invent a system of courts or enact a body of law; they brought with them from England "the twelve good men and true" before whom every man has an inalienable right to his trial by "the legal judgment of his peers"; the right of "habeas corpus" which every man may appeal to this judgment; the very form of representative government elected by the people from among themselves. All these are ancient Anglo-Saxon usages and flourished in England 600 years before the Norman Conquest, which could not subvert, but perforce adopted them, and Magna Charta merely confirmed the freeman in his ancient rights. They were so well known that they were not even defined in that famous instrument.

Our principles of political and social liberty, our principles of religious and civil liberty, these have given us our national life, our "American Spirit," controlled, yet free, individual, yet orderly, "A government of the people, for the people, by the people." England, by her silent, yet effective force, as she stands by Canada and her other colonies today, so stood by us as a colony until a German King on the English throne forced us to break away.

MRS. HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN.

SYRIA AND ARABIA.

A Protest Against the Claims of the Latter for Union.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There seems to be a great deal of confusion and not a negligible difference of opinion, arising from conflicting interests, over the disposition of Syria, among those who are shaping the political reconstruction of the small States of the world in Paris.

The question of Syria has been, according to the press dispatches, prominently brought to the fore in the Peace Conference, and for the possession or protection of that country, or parts of it, many claims have been submitted to the Peace Council by the different interested powers.

The most absurd, but not the least amazing, of these claims is the one submitted a few days ago by Prince Faisal, son of the King of Hedjaz, to the effect that Syria ought to be conceded to the kingdom of Arabia. This new-made Prince, thanks to the brains of his hired interpreters and intelligent dictators, aspires to a great kingdom of which he wants Syria to be an integral State. He founds his claim on the theory that the majority of Syrians are Arabs by race, and goes so far as to say that if a plebiscite were taken in Syria, a great majority would vote in favor of joining the country to Arabia, a theory wholly unfounded and altogether untrue.

According to the best authorities on the races of the Near East, the Syrians are of the lineage of the ancient Phoenicians, and of Greek settlers who flocked to the eastern shores of the Mediterranean in commercial as well as cultural pursuits; their civilization, through the ages and under many conquerors, always followed the culture of the West, while that of the Arabs remained nomadic in its nature and Eastern in its evolutions.

It is admitted, even by the most ardent advocates of the claim to join Syria in whole or in part to Arabia—Prince Faisal and those who are utilizing his ignorance—that Syria is a far more advanced State in its civilization and economical development than any near Eastern State, while Arabia, and they do not deny it, is on the opposite side of the measure; and for an illustration I will state the following facts which will prove the diversity in cultural standing of these two countries.

When the Arabs in 1915 declared their independence from Turkey and started to form a Government of their own, they could not find among all their countrymen an able person to occupy the important post of Secretary of Foreign Affairs in their Cabinet, and they had to ask a young Syrian to accept that office. The writer has a personal and intimate friendship with that young Syrian poet who was intrusted with the management of the foreign affairs of that country; although he never had any diplomatic study or any experience in governmental work, yet he was selected and hired for that important office, and exalted by his subordinate foreign employers.

To get a clearer idea about the social and intellectual standing of both countries, I will state the estimates of those who are in best position to know about education in the Near East. It is estimated that illiteracy in Arabia is 97 per cent., while in Syria it is 7 per cent., with the educational system of the latter progressing hand in hand with its economical development and promising to put illiteracy out of existence.

It is an undeniable fact that there is a very small minority of the population of Syria which claims to belong to the Arabic race, and it is this minority that encouraged and rather pushed Prince Faisal to that astonishing claim over Syria.

To force Syria, in whole or in part, into submission to a foreign race whose culture and social position are far inferior to those of the Syrians, would be just like trying to force a physical body against its natural course in order to secure an unnatural action or result, but in due time that body will react to regain its established position and follow its natural course of action.

Since historic times to our recent days, in giving civilization or in acquiring culture, Syria turned her eyes to the west, and had been, due to its geographical situation, the favored goal of the Western adventurers who aspired to spreading their culture in the East.

Let us hope that the peace delegates of the great powers in general, and those of this great republic in particular, when deciding the fate of that small country, Syria, will not let the conflicting interests of some particular power or another stand in the way of giving the Syrians, whose advanced social and economical standing has been fully and rightly demonstrated, a full right to self-government under the guidance of one great power, who will take to heart the interests of the population and help them to the development of a national life.

News from Mesopotamia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have often heard of the urgent need of Armenia and Syria, and now that the Near East drive is on again we are reminded of the intense distress of the Armenians and Syrians, but almost nothing is said of the Mesopotamians. Yet their situation is not one bit less intolerable.

The first letter since the outbreak of the war has just arrived in America from the city of Mosul, across the Tigris from Nineveh, which was occupied by the British Army shortly after the armistice with Turkey was signed. It is interesting to note that the letter went by air service to Bagdad, some 200 miles south. It opens with "Glad tidings to you, because the British are here," and tells of the great joy that has filled the hearts of the inhabitants, particularly the Assyrian Christians, by the elimination of the Turks from the fair Province of Mosul. Prior to the entrance of the British the situation of the Assyrian Christians had reached the critical point. Some noted Christians, among them D. Saaty, who for many years was a resident of Providence, R. I., and from whose letter to his relatives in Providence I gathered my information, were about to be hanged, when suddenly British cavalry seized Mosul.

Of the terrible conditions described in the letter it is enough to say that one-fourth of the population has perished from starvation and epidemic. After speaking appreciatively of the wonderful changes wrought by the new Government within a short time, Mr. Saaty closes his letter with a humble supplication that the British may stay in his native land, and stay forever.

The Assyrian Christians and natives of Mesopotamia all over the world, in recognition of the humanitarian work of Great Britain, have selected England to serve as an administrator over their native country and have decided to petition the Peace Conference to place under English control also the second Province of Diarbekir, in Upper Mesopotamia.

'TRUTH ABOUT RUSSIA'

Responsible Russian Radicals Versus the American Friends of the Bolsheviki

By W. J. GHENT.

THE Associated Press carries the news of the organization in New York City of the "Truth About Russia Committee," whose declared purpose is "to gather authentic information about Russian affairs." The most interesting part of the news is the list of names of the founders. Prominent among these founders are the representatives of one fortnightly and three weekly periodicals which have treated the Russian problem with some degree of specialization.

Now, the first question of an open-minded reader acquainted with these periodicals is likely to be, "What will they do with this information when they get it?" Some of it, no doubt, they will print; but if the present editorial practice of these periodicals is an indication for the future, a safe bet may be registered that the part printed will be only that part, not necessarily authentic, which seems to support the editorial policy. The rest of it, no matter how authentic, may be devoted to any one of a number of uses, but it will not be used for the instruction of the reader.

To every progressive, liberal, radical, or Socialist who considers the weight, rather than the bias, of testimony, there is one outstanding fact about the situation in Russia. That is, that every name memorable in pre-war days for its connection with the great liberation movement in that land can be quoted in denunciation of the Bolsheviki. The Bolsheviki, all these liberators agree, are the wreckers of Russia. In no controverted question is the dependable testimony so one-sided. And by dependable, in this case, I mean the testimony that in pre-war days, before pro-Germanism, pacifism, defeatism, and Bolshevism had cankered so many minds, would have been regarded by American radicals as most trustworthy.

One may dismiss all "bourgeois" testimony; one may admit, for present purposes, the contention that "bourgeois" persons have no right anyhow to protest against deprivation of civil rights, plunder, starvation, torture, and even murder, and that their statements are, in the nature of things, wholly unworthy of belief. One may also dismiss all that comes from the persons immediately associated with the Kerensky régime as the utterance of those who, because they have been ousted, have a grievance. But one still has left this solid body of testimony from the "non-bourgeois"—from men and women whose devotion to the revolution has never been questioned. Among them are the three patriarchs of the revolution, Peter Kropotkin, Katherine Breshkovsky, and Nicholas Tchaikovsky; the heroines of the "propaganda of the deed," Vera Figner and Marie Spiridonova; the veteran Marxists, George Plechanoff and Paul Axelrod, and the man who in the old days was regarded in a special sense as the soul of the revolution, Vladimir Bourtseff.

These are the names which in the old days were best known to Americans; but the list includes scores of other names, less well known to us, but names closely identified with the revolution—names of men and women of the most various schools of propaganda—social revolutionaries of the right and of the left, Social Democrats of the majority and of the minority, representatives of the Group of Toil, anarchists, anarchist communists, liberals, progressives, and some who defy classification. It includes even Maxim Gorky, who, though he has returned to the Bolsheviki, cannot erase from the record his terrific denunciations of the brutality of the Lenine-Trotzky régime.

This overwhelming weight of radical testimony is a factor of first importance in judging the situation in Russia. But I fail to find this fact reflected in the pages of these periodicals. In the name of liberalism or radicalism they discredit or ignore the words of the most honored radicals of Russia. Their solicitude about "accurate information," "truth," and other desirable things does not translate itself into a hospitable welcome. However assiduous their search may be, the pearl of great price, when found, is not displayed in their shop windows. I search these journals in vain for the authentic information which I readily find elsewhere. There is not, of course, absolute and entire suppression; the pose of candor cannot be successfully maintained by such a method. But there is constant distortion of the available testimony, and, in the main, an avoidance of the kind of testimony inimical to the editorial policy. On the other hand, there is a vast display of the kind of testimony which no person of judgment will consider for other than what it is—the utterances of parlor Bolsheviki, of tea-table revolutionists, of romanticists, of the Fothergills and Hermiones of Don Marquis's "little group of serious thinkers."

All persons who care anything about the validity of their conclusions in this matter want the truth about Russia. Unfortunately, there is much that comes from that unhappy land which is untrustworthy—sometimes mere idle rumor, sometimes willful exaggeration, and sometimes what seems to be deliberate lying out of whole cloth. But a judicial study of the matter will reveal no greater amount of distortion on the part of the anti-Bolsheviki than on the part of the pro-Bolsheviki. The man who of all men in Europe is perhaps best equipped (if any single person is sufficiently so endowed) to weigh this testimony and make an upright decision thereon—Hjalmar Branting, the leader of the Socialists of Sweden—has again declared, within the last few days, that Bolshevism is the destroyer of Russia. But neither Branting's testimony, nor that of any of the others most capable of telling us what is happening in Russia, will find welcome in the pages of the journals whose representatives have just formed the "Truth About Russia Committee." The open-minded inquirer will have to look elsewhere. The assertion of this committee that it seeks sincerely and impartially to gather and disseminate the facts about Russia is a pretentious pose.

LAWS FOR AMERICANIZATION

NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With reference to your editorial article in today's TIMES, "An Expert Discusses Assimilation," stating that I offered no suggestions as to what should be done to minimize or abolish the evils which I have described, I would respectfully refer you to the records in the testimony given by me before the Senate Propaganda Committee. You will find that specific remedial legislation was requested by me.

The enforcement of the law providing that foreign language newspapers be required to print all of the contents of their publications in the English language also, the making this law permanent, and declining exemptions, is one of the measures which is bound considerably to improve conditions.

The bill H. R. 10,186, introduced in the House of Representatives on Feb. 23, 1918, is another measure the enactment of which was requested for the improvement and extension of our postal savings banks, together with the right sort of publicity for securing postal savings deposits. I feel sure that the enactment of this bill would result in furnishing to those who are in need of reliable depositories the means to accumulate savings in this country instead of exporting the same to their countries of origin. The importance of this bill becomes obvious by considering the fact that over a million dollars each day was exported annually in normal years in the past, and that for the very lack of adequate depositories millions of our residents are hoarding their savings, which savings are estimated to amount at the present time to well over $1,500,000,000.

Our 17,500,000 resident immigrants realize that industrial employment will not provide them with wages in old age. Therefore, and because they desire to re-engage in agriculture, they save all that can be saved out of their wages, deprive themselves of much comfort, and are satisfied to live in the least expensive way for a long series of years until an amount has been accumulated which they expect will enable them to satisfy their hunger for a farm home. Most of the evils in our immigration conditions no doubt would automatically solve themselves if immigrants could be protected from the land sharks, and if arrangements could be made whereby they could satisfy their hunger for land in this country without exploitation. The age of pioneering is just about gone. Our average families dread isolation in the solitude, and the lack of civilized life in the wilderness. Colonization on the European village system, with American improvements, whereby the agricultural colonist could live in a community, have schools, churches, meeting halls, moving picture shows, &c., would solve this problem satisfactorily, I believe. Farms equipped with the necessary buildings, fences, wells, live stock, agricultural implements, seed, and feed should be provided, so that the new settlers could pay for the same in a reasonable number of years out of the crops raised by them on their American farms. The bill H. R. 8,988 introduced to the House of Representatives on Jan. 19, 1918, and S. 3,952 introduced to the Senate of the United States on Feb. 25, 1918, would solve this problem. I made request for the enactment of this bill also.

In order to counteract the systematic and intensive work conducted by certain "efficient" and interdealing parties, such as the Embassies and Consulates of certain European countries, the foreign language press in the United States, the transatlantic steamship companies and their agents, a number of immigrant clergymen and the omnipresent exporter of savings masquerading as banker, the bill S. 5,472 introduced in the Senate of the United States on Jan. 29, 1919, should be enacted. I urged the Senate Propaganda Committee to support this bill. This bill provides for the regulation and supervision of the business of the export of savings and prohibits the artificial stimulation and solicitation of the export of savings. A bill providing similar measures regarding transatlantic steerage ticket agents is obviously also necessary.

The problem should be solved satisfactorily, within a comparatively short space of time, by the enactment of the above bills. Conditions would surely be improved thereby. The production of foodstuffs would be increased as one of the results. In the newly created agricultural colonies large numbers of our returning soldiers, professional men, merchants, artisans, druggists, farmers, hotel keepers, &c., could find spheres of activity and make a good living, as another of the results. Efforts at Americanization could be successful thereafter, because those millions of our residents who at the present time believe that it is impossible for them to stay and thrive in the United States in their old age, and therefore are indifferent to the learning of our language, to the acquiring of knowledge about our institutions and ideals, would strive to become Americanized, avail themselves of American opportunities, become loyal Americans and permanent factors in our national welfare. Large numbers of the floating element could be changed into responsible owners of homes, interested in permanent welfare, morally as well as materially. Large numbers of useful and desirable residents could by these measures satisfy their sincere desire of becoming thoroughly Americanized and settle down in this country for good. Large numbers of contented farm owners are a solid foundation for the structure of our national well-being. Our peasant immigrants are good farmers, they produced excellent crops in their countries of origin on lands which have been farmed for over 2,000 years; they would be glad to stay here. As a matter of fact they are only induced to depart from here—from the land which they know has done so much for them, and has been so good to them and which for all of us is the best land to live in, to fight and die for—because the promise of a farm home in Europe lures them away from here. The propagation of evil tendencies could best be counteracted by proceedings along these lines.

The Kaisers have been eliminated, but the same European financiers remain, they want our moneyed immigrants more now than ever before. Propaganda has already commenced on a great scale for the export of savings and remigration. The respective interdealing forces prepare for a veritable harvest of profits to be derived out of the practices which have been harmful to the best interests of the United States and which still remain unmolested. It is our right to defend our interests and by the enactment of proper measures protect the credulous and misinformed. If the system is to be continued whereby our thrifty immigrants and their savings are removed and only the good-for-nothings and unfortunates remain, then it is only a question of time when we are bound to have such bad conditions that it will be hard, if at all possible, to correct them.

MANY WOMEN MAKE THEIR OWN CLOTHES

High Cost of Materials Forces Women to Study Smart Fashions—One Gown Costs the Same Sum That Used to Buy Three.

SOME New York women whose lives demanded smart dressing were dscussing the problem of clothes. They admitted that, during the last year or two, the whole question to be considered had changed astonishingly. They also were forced to concede that it had lost none of its importance.

They agreed that they must dress distinctively and well—more so now than ever before—in order to hold their rightful places in the scheme of the world's activities. But how do this economically? There was the stumbling block. This particular group of women grew interested in the tales of some of their number about how they had gone back to the old and well-tried method of making their own gowns. They were doing the trick according to modern and novel rules, but they were actually superintending the making of their own clothes and allowing their own personalities to merge with the creation of those gowns, which were destined to speak so loudly to the public of what their personalities were.

It is true that, when the average woman buys a gown just because it is ready to put on and will save her oceans of thinking and trouble, she is subtracting from, instead of adding to, her individuality. That is just the thing which the modern woman, if she is wise, is anxious to avoid. On the other hand, if she decides to preserve that precious personality by hiring an expert dressmaker who will study her and dress her accordingly, she lays up for herself bills that make the heart grow faint. There is but one course of procedure—to take a hand, or a mind, in the construction of her own clothes.

Dresses Must Be Lasting.

The prices of materials have been raised beyond the wildest expectations of the most optimistic of manufacturers—and who but the woman is the sufferer? She must adjust herself to this changed condition of affairs, and there is but one way to do it—to make the dress of such fine material and of so excellent a style that it will last through the ravages of more than one or two, or even three, seasons. This grave condition of market prices has made the woman realize that only the best of material will answer her purpose, and that she must become an expert in the value of the stuff with which she is dealing. She can afford to take no chances by listening to the word of any saleswoman.

There is one more important thing which the expensive dressmaker uses and which the woman of brains can apply herself once she gives her attention to it. That is the matter of smartness of line. The acquiring of this knowledge is not an easy accomplishment. In fact it needs to have brought to its study all of the psychology and analysis of which one is capable. But, once acquired, it becomes an asset invaluable to its possessor.

What with a stunning piece of material and a knowledge of line, only a seamstress is needed to turn out the smartest of gowns, for if one studies the current fashions one will realize that trimmings are mostly taboo and that the most renowned designers gain their effects by giving concentrated attention to those two salient features.

A young college woman, who had chosen to pursue the business of the specialty shops for her profession, came home to her flat one evening bearing a large bundle under her arm. The contents proved to be a handsome strip of metal brocade which she had found on a remnant table at some surprising bargain. She dragged out from her closet a form in the semblance of herself, and before long she was well on the way toward producing a lovely evening coat. She explained that she needed this sort of thing every once in a while in order to keep up her reputation for being an expert in good dressing. Also it was obvious that sh[illegible]uld not afford to buy one for th[illegible]vagant price with which such a [illegible] it is tagged even in its bargain [illegible] On the other hand she had, in the pursuit of her business, absorbed the knowledge of perfect line, and, with a well-cut pattern to use for a beginning, she was able to make for herself a coat which gave all the evidence of having had several hundreds of dollars sunk into it.

She went on to tell the story of how her dressmaking activities did not stop at an evening coat. In fact, she displayed a tailored suit of luxurious, soft homespun which she acknowledged to have made herself.

"It's easy," she casually remarked, "I merely know the place to send for this hand-woven material and it costs even less than the ordinarily popular serges and twills. Then, with the help of the tailor on the corner, who presses all of the seams with his heavy irons, I turn out this masterpiece in no time. You see, coats are soft now—no padding or stiffening—and I know the line beyond the shadow of a doubt, and there you are!"

This girl is only one of many who have realized that the power of their brain cells added to their clothes make them better-dressed women. They cannot afford the money for the gown de luxe. Therefore, they take pains to afford the time and intelligence which achieve the same result.

A Clever American Abroad.

The forehanded and clever wife of a man attached to the American embassy in China set forth from America for her residence in Shanghai provided with all the necessities for home dressmaking. She knew that she would have to spend a number of years in that foreign city. She knew, too, that her chances of having attractive gowns made there were worse than none at all. Also, her position demanded that she look her best, which she felt she could not do unless she were properly dressed. When, in that far-off land she was confronted with the necessity of a new frock, she sent to America for a pattern, engaged Chinese seamstress to do the heavy work, and proceeded to engage herself in the fascinating occupation of turning out a well-made and smart-looking dress.

So many were the compliments heaped upon her that she became quite enamored of her own artistic achievements and went about telling those who liked the story how she prayed and worked over her things until they became perfect creations. Later, on her way home, she stopped at Honolulu for a season of social doings and there again her associates remarked upon her up-to-date clothes. How had she had time to have those fashionable gowns sent all the way to China? they eagerly inquired.

One of the "helps" which this woman swore by was a plaster reproduction made exactly in the semblance of her own peculiar form. Before leaving home she had visited a place where they took a cast of her shape and then proceeded to make her an unspoilable image which she could use for all of her fitting and draping. It proved the height of efficiency, for it was always ready to stand indefinitely, and there could be no mistake in the fitting because of the exactness of the cast.

This is only one of the many late inventions made for the assistance of her who goes in for the construction of her own wardrobe. Everything is done to make her way easy. She no longer has to spend precious moments upon the sewing together of a foundation belt or bodice. They are all ready made, with hooks and eyes, and even dress shields attached, so that all the artist has to think of are the essential points which, after all, supply what is called the art of a gown. There are snappers already sewed upon a tape ready to be easily attached to the opening of a skirt or blouse. There are patent markers for the edges of skirts—in fact, there are many dressmaking accessories now to be had which make the path of the individual designer a simple one to travel.

The home-made look is a hated bugbear. Many a woman hears in her inner consciousness the sound of those words and forgoes forever the possibility of taking a hand in the making of her own clothes. But the phrase is rather a misnomer. The home-made look is only the result of a home-made point of view. The first duty of the woman who would take part in the building of her wardrobe is to acquire a point of view and she should take pains to avoid any chance of contaminating her set of standards.

She must keep her ideals perfect here just as she would endeavor to purify her ideals in other directions. She must not let any ray of imperfection creep into the standards that she sets up for herself. Then, once she has decided upon the actual rules and restrictions of the art she is about to undertake, she will stand little or no chance of making the sort of mistakes which stamp her production as home-made. She produces a sample of her own ideals once she has taken the trouble to establish those standards for herself.

Clothes Grow in Importance.

Since women have taken to rushing about madly all day attending to one form of business or another, they are realizing more clearly that their clothes play an important part in the impression that they are creating. Where some were accustomed to use makeshift dresses, or more or less to pin their clothes together, now they are coming to understand that their things must be well done throughout before they can begin to create that impression which they so desire them to make. This, then, is another reason why women are thinking more and more closely about the constituents of good dressing. Every day they are facing the fact that it is necessary, and they are beginning to understand the reason why.

Men have an easier time, to be sure. Each one of them may dress like his neighbor and all is well. But that happy time has not arrived for women, if it ever will arrive. They are still known as the creatures who are beautiful, and, though the type of their beautiful dressing has changed materially, is must still be beautiful. The change involves a change in the point of view—that is all.

Line and material, then—these are the two important phases of the new home dressmaking. One is a matter of brain power and understanding, the other of dollars and cents. The clever combination of the two is a union that will gain for itself recognition wherever it may happen to be, and much satisfaction lies in store for the woman who successfully accomplishes the trick.

CHILDREN FROM "MOVIES" IN A NOVEL FASHION SHOW

DURING the past week there was launched what seemed to be an entirely new idea in the way of fashion shows. The pity was that more people could not have seen it. Children's clothes are fascinating enough to the heart of women, in themselves, but these were displayed by little children—mostly "movie" actors and actresses—who wore the rompers and sweaters and party dresses, &c., with the utmost charm and grace. These miniature living models made their bows and displayed the various features of the clothes they wore with all the sophistication and ability shown by their more mature sisters in the business of being models. There were some, who must have been as young as three or four years, who showed never a tremor before the loud applause of their fascinated audience.

Children's clothes, according to this advance showing of Spring and Summer styles, will grow simpler and simpler. In fact, they show no intricacy of cut whatever, most of the lines being of kimono type and origin. The belts are in no way confining. The necklines give every chance for freedom and ease and, in fact, pains are taken consistently to make the clothes of the children comfortable and blessed things to wear.

The gingham dresses were particularly charming, some of them being fashioned from the most elusive of pastel colorings. One peach-colored dress, for a child of about five, hung from the shoulders in the straightest of lines and had quaintly cut, rounded collars and cuffs of pure white linen. The puffy little bloomers, to match, peeped out briefly below the skirt. There was another dress just like this in a faint pastel blue.

The organdy frocks were most graceful. Most of them showed but little trimming and, when there was any, it was used most sparingly. Generally, the fussiness consisted of little pleated frills of the same shade of organdy, for most of these, again, were made from new and colorful tones of pink and blue and green. One frock of this character was made fro ma light violet organdy and trimmed with rows of frills made of an orchid-colored organdy.

Sweaters and Tam o' Shanters.

The little knitted sweaters and tam o' shanters were quite the hit of the show. They were woven of baby shades over the lines of sweaters for older folk and had all the charm which that combination usually gives. One, of a salad green shade, made on a sleeveless pattern, was worn by a blonde baby child. Another, in a pastel shade of pink, reached far below the line of the child's hips and she wore with it a little peaked knitted cap of pink that was strikingly picturesque.

There were one or two lovely white linen dresses for older children which showed an interesting feature. They were trimmed in rather postery fashion with linen of a deeper, darker shade. For instance, there was one with the bodice and upper part of the skirt cut in one piece and of white. The lower portion of the skirt, which buttoned on to the upper portion, was made of a light blue shade of linen. There were blue linen cuffs and a blue linen collar, and large white pearl buttons stood out in places against the blue.

Some of the hats for girls between the ages of 7 and 12 were beautiful in shape and color. There was one of bright red with a wide mushroom brim and red streamers at back. There was another brilliant green one with a flatter brim and streamers of the same color. The model wore these with a smart little tailored suit of white silk jersey. The combination was one worthy to be copied, for it was lovely in its effect.

FASHIONS ALWAYS CHANGING

Fifty years ago, according to a chronicler in The Oregonian of that date, "flesh-colored gaiters, with the toes stitched with black, to look as if the feet were bare," were reported to be the mode. They had, we are further assured, a "shockingly natural effect." One may well believe that they had. So, for the matter of that, do the fashions of any generation now past cause a peculiar sensation in the breast of the observer of a later time. The costumes of the past always seem queer to us, and old fashion-plates can be counted on to provoke smiles. We do not always stop to reflect that the garments some of us are wearing now are likely in the same manner to stir the risibilities of our grandchildren.

Having just passed through an era in which khaki service cloth has been the predominant material for clothing and utility has been the prevailing principle in the design of garments, we may be said to have experienced our only fashionless period in at least half a century. When we think of "fashion" we are likely to have no vision of the obviously useful. It would be futile to try to trace a mode to a basis of reason or common sense. Philosophers have tried this, but have failed to make out their case. They find rather a quest of something new and strange to occupy attention that cannot be won by more spiritual issues. Lately, no doubt, there has been more than a touch of commercialism in the ever-changing styles. For us to adopt a uniform system and cling to it until the goods were worn out would restrict sales of goods and greatly curtail certain industries. It being the height of good salesmanship to create demand, our arbiters see to it that changes take place with sufficient frequency to forestall too great thrift. Yet it would be superficial to say that this is the sum of all there is in fashion-changing. There have been revolutions in clothes among civilized peoples ever since the world was young. They had them in Helen's day no less than in the gay times of the Second Empire.

Fashion is not primarily, as a mistaken historian has intimated, "that which the multitude wear, and not the attire of the elite." It represents, first, unrest and the desire for change, and, second, the primeval desire to keep up with the Joneses. There were Joneses when people dwelt in caves, just as there are now, and multitudes who let the pace be set for them. There was once a man who proposed a school of fashion. He had a basis well worked out. He would first study the "needs" of the people, he said, and would deduce from them a mode which would meet their requirements, spiritual, moral and physical. There should be comfort and esthetic satisfaction. And then we would settle down to the enjoyment of the product and change no more. The economic sin of casting away an excellent garment, still capable of shedding the rain and keeping out the wind, would never again be committed upon the flimsy pretext that one would be better dead than out of style. But the school died with the prospectus. Its foundation was not, after all, a scientific one. It took no account of the important factor of human nature.

The crinolines of the reign of Louis Napoleon had prototypes in remote antiquity. The Orientals of long ago had devised an equivalent of the hoopskirt which we now ridicule, but which it is not certain we shall not readopt at some future time. Only a few years ago the high waists and sheath gowns which women of fashion affected were hailed as novelties, but the instigators of them had borrowed the idea from Mme. Recamier. She, says Roger Boutet de Monvel, was inspired by the Greeks and Romans. The generation still living remembers the "bustle." It was in the height of a passing glory in the early 70s, but it was even then almost as old as the hills. In the more recent '80s there was a fashion among men of wearing trousers that made many of them resemble living skeletons. But in the early eighteenth century it is recorded that our ancestors "wore clothes so tighte to ye skin that it might well bee conceived that they wore no clothes at all." The practice of wearing furs in Summer is not a mere bit of modern feminine foolishness, as some have supposed. It has been traced to certain tribes of wild barbarians.—Oregonian.

Daily Evidence of Activity Among Those Interests Which Want to Sow Discord Among Allies

By WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

THE allied Governments now engaged in the task of arranging the peace terms which they will enforce upon Germany are still face to face with insidious, devious, and powerful German propaganda. Unfortunately, the propagandist appears to be "putting it over." Consciously or unconsciously, a large number of American publications are helping them. These publications are either in sympathy with the objects of the propaganda or else are gullible beyond belief.

German propaganda, having been at work in America before we entered the war, was scotched during the war by fear of punishment, but it never entirely ceased, and it is working with redoubled energy since the signing of the armistice. Today it runs along several lines, including attempts to spread Bolshevism, to create dissatisfaction and dissension in the army, to preach the weakness of the Administration, to breed distrust between the French and Americans, and to inculcate an Anglophobia in this country.

The object of this propaganda, of course, is to destroy the cohesion of the Allies at the Peace Conference, so that the Allies may lose the fruits of their victory through dissension among themselves. We have an illustrious example in the work of Talleyrand, who, at the Peace Conference after the Napoleonic wars played one of the allies against the other and succeeded in turning defeat into victory. Now that we have beaten the Germans in the field, we must not allow their trickery to defeat us at the council table.

Let us take up in order several concrete examples of German propaganda:

The Germans are encouraging Bolshevism. It is no new trick of theirs. We have seen positive evidence that they financed Lenine and Trotsky in their attack upon organized government. There are indications that the propagandists encouraged the Spartacan group in Germany and are still aiding them. The reason in the first case was obvious—the overthrow of the Russian Government. Their post-war plotting is equally clear. First, the Spartacans give them an excuse to have a large standing army to be held in readiness to attack and overthrow the allied Governments if the Allies can be separated and divided by dissensions created by German propaganda. Another reason is the desire to spread fear of anarchy among the Allies, with the result that in the final conference they will be willing to allow the formation of a strong German Government, even the rehabilitation of the imperial Hohenzollerns—in other words, to have the allied Governments feel that they must choose between the imperial Government and a Government based upon anarchy, of which they have had a frightful example in the Bolshevistic régime in Russia. The propagandists hope to raise the question in the minds of the Allies, "If it is not the part of wisdom to allow the control of Germany to stay in the hands of the autocracy, which they claim has been purged by fire, is repentant and prepared to be good, rather than turn it over to anarchy."

The German propagandists in America have attempted to cause dissatisfaction with our participation in the war. Their methods have been twofold—continuous attack upon the Administration with the object of convincing the public that the American people were not behind its plans for a world peace, and creating dissatisfaction with our army through circulating stories of dissatisfaction among the men, absence of necessary war material and supplies, unnecessary hardships and favoritism. It is needless to reply that in the sudden mobilization of about four million men no human power could have avoided some hardships, some delays, some lack of perfect co-ordination in the hastily built military machine.

But the most dangerous, the most damnable effort of the propagandists aims at arousing distrust, antipathy between America and her allies. The means adopted to accomplish this result have been far-reaching. One false thought they are trying to sow in the minds of the American people is that there is an irreconcilable racial difference between us and the Latin races. They assert that we are more closely akin to the Germanic races, not only by blood but by habits of thought, industries, and methods of living. No such story is too little to publish. And last, the fact that England has declared an embargo upon foreign goods is being utilised to its utmost extent to make the American people believe that England stands ready to declare a commercial war against the United States. Absurd! The propagandists plainly hope to sow such dissension and distrust among America and England and France that it will be possible for a German successor of the illustrious Talleyrand to overthrow the councils of the Allies and snatch victory from defeat.

Nearly all lies have some grains of truth. If they were absolute lies, they would be too easily detected to be of any service. It is true that the French customs are different from ours, and that the blunt, plain spoken American may have made some criticism of the Latin temperament or manners. But that does not mean we have not a wonderful love for the nation that has been traditionally our friend and a wonderful respect for the nation that has so gallantly protected itself and so bravely fought the fight of humanity and justice. And it has not ceased to be true that we hate German untrustworthiness, cruelty, barbarious methods of warfare, worship of brute force, and cynical contempt for sentiment.

In connection with the efforts to make it appear that American soldiers are developing friendly feelings toward the Germans, the following paragraphs may be quoted from a letter just received in New York from an American army officer of undoubted intelligence and veracity, at present stationed in the zone of occupation:

"Fraternising is against the rules, but of course in the houses the soldiers see a lot of the women and children, and are very friendly with them. I don't think, though, the boche men have made any inroads upon their affections."

In France attempts have been made to breed a distrust of America, to question her motives. The propagandists have tried to spread the idea that no nation would go to war for sentiment, and the cynical question is asked, "What does America want?"

What about the American citizens—a small minority, thank heaven!—who have lent themselves to this propaganda? It is hard to believe that they are as simpleminded as a charitable view would make them appear. It should be remembered that in some cases they are men who were violently pro-German before America went into the war and have supported America with a hidden stiletto ready for a stab in the back.

NEW SOLDIERS' CLUB WILL OPEN HERE

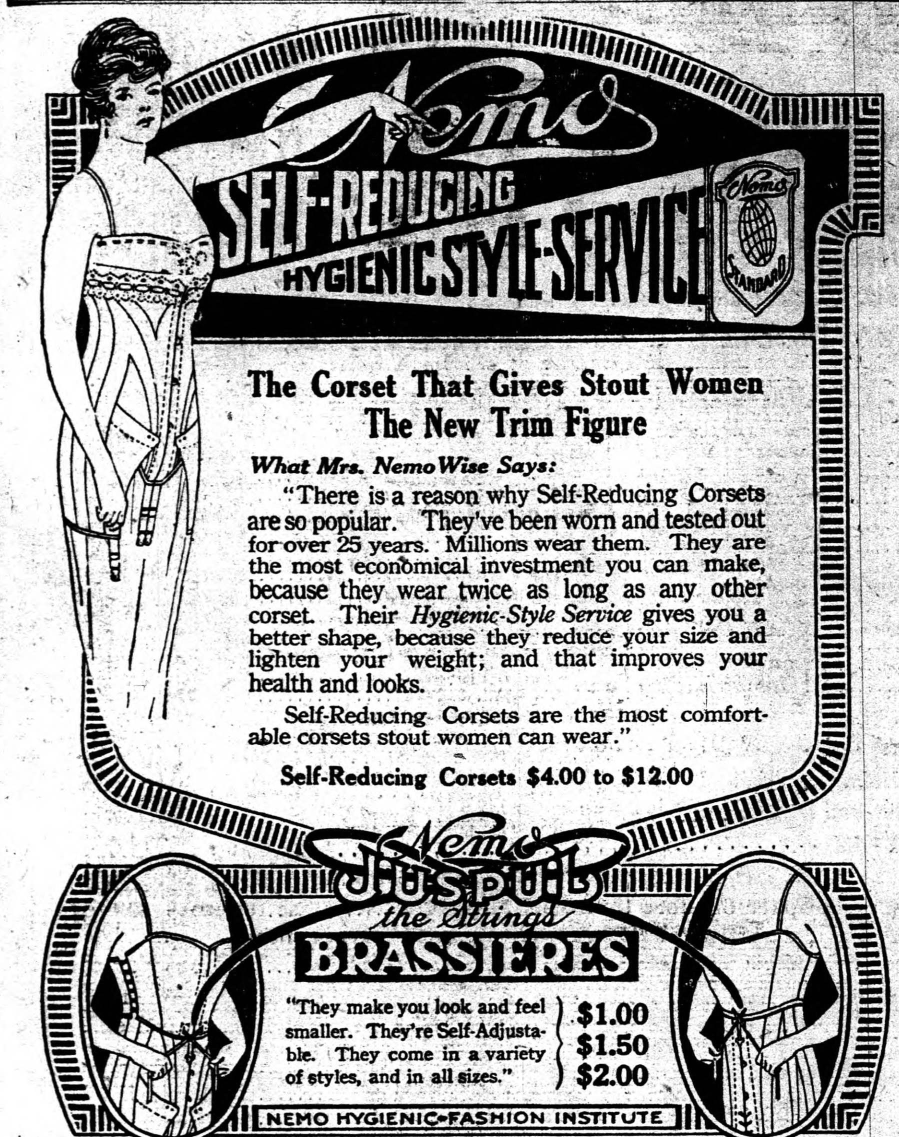
A NEW CLUB for soldiers which will have a formal opening at 253 Madison Avenue on St. Valentine's Day is the Tank Corps League. The Tank Corps, which calls itself the Super-Suicide Club, because the service is especially dangerous, is doing its own advertising and raising its own money for the new club.

The new league has the names of prominent men and women as its officers, but it is going to work for its own support. It has a vaudeville troupe, including members of the "Flying Minstrel" troupe, which General Pershing sent to all parts of the western front. This new organization, in which there are twenty-odd men, is to tour the country. Success is assured, for the men have an "angel" who has put up the money for the tour. The troupe is sure of $2,000 a week so long as it makes good. Another source of income which will help the league is Treat 'em Rough, a magazine established by the corps during the war.

The league will need all its money for 3,200 tank corps men due in New York in a short time. Eventually there will be returned from the other side from 7,000 to 8,000 tank men who live in New York and vicinity, and work as well as a club must be provided.

The home of the league is the parlor floor of an old-time residence. Mrs. Everett Colby is the President of the league, and the rooms have been furnishd by a committee of which Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Jr., is the Chairman. The men have had a rough time in the tanks, and when they come home they must be made comfortable.

Three tank men have already been sent to Montana, where they are raising sugar beets and using tractors. There is a demand for them in Honolulu to clear up some rough ground and to use a tank to mow down trees and a tractor as a trailer.



The Corset That Gives Stout Women The New Trim Figure

What Mrs. Nemo Wise Says:

"There is a reason why Self-Reducing Corsets are so popular. They've been worn and tested out for over 25 years. Millions wear them. They are the most economical investment you can make, because they wear twice as long as any other corset. Their Hygienic-Style Service gives you a better shape, because they reduce your size and lighten your weight; and that improves your health and looks.

Self-Reducing Corsets are the most comfortable corsets stout women can wear."

Self-Reducing Corsets $4.00 to $12.00

The New York Times,
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:-

We are now in the eighth consecutive year of our advertising of the BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE in The New York Times. The record of returns shows that The Times becomes more and more valuable each year as an advertising medium for us.

Since the first advertisement in The Times more than forty thousand families in and around New York City alone have purchased the BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE. Our advertising in this vicinity has been almost entirely in The Times.

The direct and indirect returns as a result of our advertising in The Times prove that it reaches the best homes, that your circulation is an asset to the advertiser.

I believe that an advertiser buys circulation, rather than "space", and it is very much like buying a barrel of apples. Whether you have made a satisfactory purchase depends upon how many good healthy apples are in the barrel.

Our results indicate that readers of The Times have not only the inclination, but the ability to purchase any high grade commodity.

Yours truly,

THE GROLIER SOCIETY.

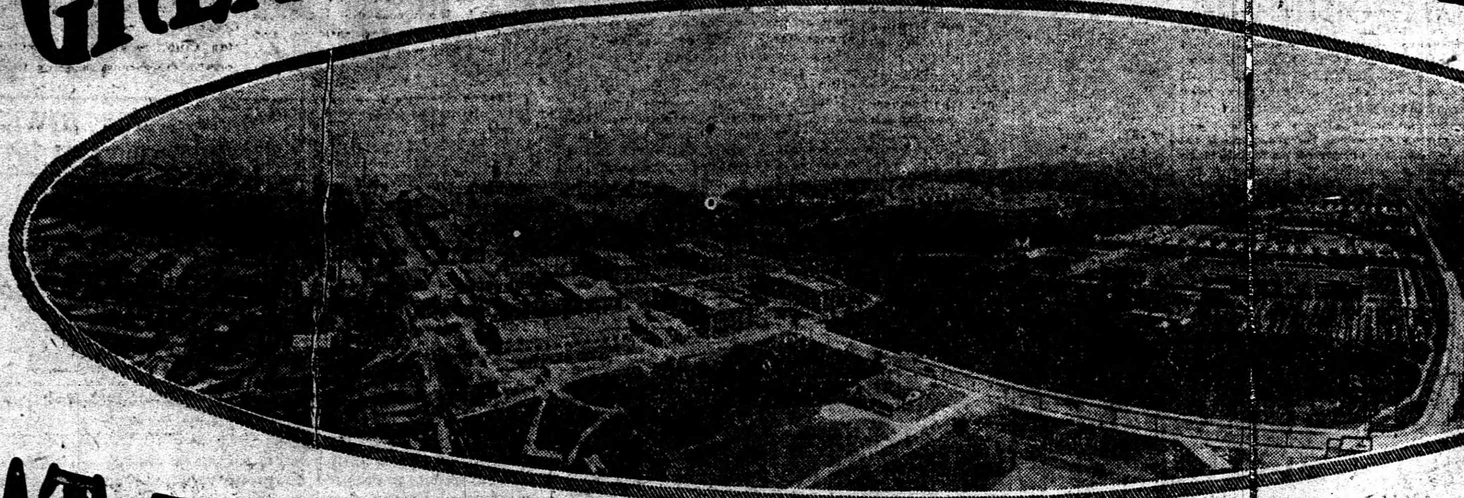
THE GREATEST HEATING PLANT IN THE WORLD



GREAT LAKES NAVAL TRAINING STATION

GREAT LAKES. ILL.

FORTY miles north of Chicago, on the shores of Lake Michigan, and fully exposed to the roaring Nor'easters that sweep unchecked across this inland sea, stands the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

It is the most imposing and the most important establishment of its kind in the universe, and it has played an intensive part in the work of fitting the nation for war.

It was here that thousands of civilians of untrained muscles and peaceful mind were whipped into resistless human fighting machines and hurried abroad to subdue the Hun.

During the progress of the war more than 150,000 superbly trained sailors were sent to sea duty and to European waters from Great Lakes, and most of the time there were more than 40,000 men in camp.

They came from all directions, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to Canada—from every variety of civilian occupation—in all conditions of physical fitness and unfitness. There were few in all those thousands who were in shape to withstand vigorous effort or exposure to the elements.

Yet, within a few months all became ideal American sailors, eager and willing for sea service—fully fit to combat the elements and every form of man-made war.

Can you draw a mental picture of the tremendous effort and the unremitting care that were necessary to produce such a result? Can you conceive the thought, the study, the labor required to transform men of peaceful tendencies into trained sailors who longed for battle, and who were in every sense fit to cope with the Hun, who had been drilled in the business of war from infancy?

Imagine, if you can, what a vast corps of able instructors was essential to not only educate these raw civilians in the ways of the navy but to guide their mental processes into entirely new channels, to feed, clothe and care for them properly, with a view to adding to their moral and physical stamina, and to inspire them with that clean patriotism which is the first step toward successful warfare.

The instructors were obliged to watch over these myriads of young men as a mother watches over her children. They had to keep them warm, comfortable, and happy. They had to entertain them to remove the sting of homesickness and prevent monotony and melancholy.

Even the air they breathed, the food they ate and the water they drank had to be kept scientifically pure and free from contamination. Every nerve in their young bodies had to be trained to resist the attacks of unseen and insidious foes.

And to this end the government chose its most eminent naval authorities, sanitary engineers, heating engineers, food experts, physicians, surgeons, and dentists, so that not one solitary detail of the sailors' daily lives was left to chance.

Their schools, mess halls, drill halls, barracks, warehouses and hospitals were fitted with the most approved modern appliances which kept them clear of contagion and as comfortable and cozy as home could be.

And all of this wonderwork was magnificently accomplished.

The Great Lakes Naval Training Station became one of the eight wonders of the world, and of lasting credit to the officers who presided over it from the beginning to the end of hostilities.

Yet, of all the serious problems to be solved—and they were legion—the one that stood head and shoulders over all the others was that of sufficient and sanitary heat.

On the very edge of Lake Michigan, within a few hundred yards of the water, in fact, the naval station stands on an utterly flat shore, 70 feet above the water and entirely exposed to the wintry winds, which are often hurricanes and blizzards. During the bitter weather of December, 1917, and January and February, 1918, great suffering was entirely obviated because the heat problem had been satisfactorily and thoroughly solved.

The many buildings were distributed over approximately 1,200 acres of ground, and the big problem lay not alone in choosing the right type of heating plant but in distributing the heating plants in such a way that one part of Great Lakes would be as warm as another.

The problem was solved in such manner that Great Lakes will go down in history as the best built, the warmest and most comfortable of all the American training camps.

Not a solitary item was left to chance. No influence was great enough to have the slightest effect. The big problem was solved strictly on its merits, and this led the board unerringly to the Kewanee Steel Firebox Boiler, which has served this nation, and the people in it, with signal success for the past thirty years or more.

The station bought and installed, either direct or through contractors, 190 Kewanee Steel Firebox Boilers, and thus, in mechanical equipment, the Great Lakes station became unique in that it has in operation more heating boiler capacity than any other single institution in existence—and thus it is the greatest heating plant in the world.

These 190 boilers were all furnished by the Kewanee Boiler Company of Kewanee, Ill., since July, 1917.

Combined, these boilers have 22,362 horse power, or an average of 117 horse power per boiler.

If placed end to end, these 190 boilers would cover a space of more than half a mile. If set close together, side by side, the battery would have 984 feet frontage, or nearly one-fifth of a mile.

These boilers contain 217,547 feet of boiler tubes and 4,820 square feet of grates. The smokestacks furnished with the boilers, if placed end to end, would make a stack of 6,652 feet, or more than one mile high. That would be the greatest smokestack in the world for a heating plant.

These 190 boilers have a combined capacity of over 2,200,000 square feet of direct radiation, or an average of 11,900 square feet per boiler, or, to put it in other words, four hundred carloads of radiation.

These 190 Kewanee Steel Firebox Boilers are distributed among twenty-two camps at the Great Lakes station. Every heating unit is equipped also with Kewanee hot water storage tanks, and the larger units with Kewanee water heating garbage burners.

Naturally we are proud of the fact that the Kewanee Steel Firebox Boilers have been chosen to create the greatest heating plant in the world. But we are prouder of the results that have been achieved. We feel as though we have "done our bit" in promoting the comfort and health of these thousands of courageous young men who went away to sea. And, perhaps, while you who read this will be apt to accuse us of blowing our own horn, we would like to ask you if you wouldn't blow yours if you had participated in a line of endeavor that helped make capable and happy sailors who went, fully prepared, to the four points of the compass, to fight for our flag?

OUR NEGRO SOLDIERS' BRILLIANT WAR RECORD

Saw the Hottest Fighting in the Argonne and Elsewhere—Entire Battalion Got Croix de Guerre for Heroic Conduct

NEGRO soldiers made a record as fighters in this war as they did in the Spanish-American and civil wars. Fighting for the first time on the soil of the world's most famous battlefields—Europe—and for the first time brought into direct comparison with the best soldiers of Germany, Great Britain, and France, they showed themselves able to hold their own where the tests of courage, endurance, and aggressiveness were most severe.

Colored troops fought valiantly at Château-Thierry, Soissons, on the Vesle, in Champagne, in the Argonne, and in the final attacks in the Metz region. The entire first battalion of the 367th Infantry—"Buffaloes"—was awarded the Croix de Guerre for heroism in the drive on Metz. Most remarkable of all, they received their baptism of battle in this attack; at the start they won honors which veterans of many conflicts have failed to capture.

In previous engagements of the war, for distinguished service, three colored regiments as units were awarded the Croix de Guerre, which bestows on each member the right to wear the coveted badge. When the fighting stopped the negro troops were nearest the Rhine.

Not until now has the story as a whole of the part played by our negro troops in France been available. The total number of negro combat troops was 42,800. These consisted of the 92d Division, commanded by Major Gen. Charles G. Ballou, and four regiments of the Provisional 93d Division. To describe the colored man as a fighter in a war which, because of the terrible weapons used, called for more pure nerve than any other war, three ways present themselves: to show the negro in individual exploits, then in a regiment, engaged separately with white troops, and finally, to show him in a battle in a division entirely composed of men of his own race.

Negro as Individual Fighter.

Here is an individual exploit:

The 368th Infantry, colored, fought in the Argonne. It became necessary to send a runner with a message to the left flank of an American firing line. The way was across an open field swept by heavy enemy machine gun fire.

Volunteers were called for. Private Edward Saunders of Company I responded. Before he had gone far a shell cut him down. As he fell he cried to his comrades:

"Some one come and get this message. I am wounded."

Lieutenant Robert L. Campbell of the same company sprang to the rescue. He dashed across the shell-swept space, picked up the wounded private, and, with the Germans fairly hailing bullets around him, carried his man back to the American lines.

For the valor shown both were cited for the Distinguished Service Cross, and Lieutenant Campbell, in addition, was recommended for a Captaincy.

Another single detail, taken from this same company:

John Baker, having volunteered, was taking a message through heavy shell fire to another part of his line. A shell struck his hand, tearing away part of it, but the negro, unfaltering, delivered the message.

He was asked why he did not seek aid for his wounds before completing the journey.

"I thought the message might contain information that would save lives," was the answer.

Under the same Lieutenant Robert L. Campbell, a few colored soldiers, armed only with their rifles, trench knives, and hand grenades, picked up from shell holes along the way, were moving over a road in the Château-Thierry sector. Suddenly their course was crossed by the firing of a German machine gun. They tried to locate it by the direction of the bullets, but could not. To their right, a little ahead, lay a space covered with thick underbrush; just back of it was an open field.

Lieutenant Campbell, who knew by the direction of the bullets that his party had not been seen by the Germans, ordered one of his men, with a rope which they happened to have, to crawl to the thick underbrush, and tie the rope to several stems of the brush; then to withdraw as far as possible and pull the rope, making the brush shake as though men were crawling through it. The purpose was to draw direct fire from the machine gun, and, by watching, locate its position.

The ruse worked. Lieutenant Campbell then ordered three of his men to steal out and flank the machine gun on one side, while he and two others moved up and flanked it on the other side.

The brush was shaken more violently by the secret rope. The Germans, their eyes focused on the brush, poured a hail of bullets into it. Lieutenant Campbell gave the signal. The flanking party dashed up; with their hand grenades they killed four of the boches and captured the remaining three—also the machine gun.

In the larger bodies of colored troops, from the regiment to the division, the participation of the negro soldiers naturally divides itself into two parts on account of the way they were sent over. The negro division, composed of drafted men, did not get into action until right at the last, but individual regiments did. The four regiments that went over first were composed of old National Guard units recruited up to the required quota. These were the 369th, 370th, 371st, and 372d Infantry Regiments, afterward organized into the Provisional 93d Division. Until just before the last days of the fighting, however, they were brigaded separately with French troops. Three of these regiments, the 369th, the 371st, and the 372d, have received the high honor of the Croix de Guerre from the French Government for distinguished service. Sixty-one officers and men of the 370th have been similarly decorated.

Fighting Beside the French.

Here is the fighting record of one of these regiments sandwiched among the French forces—the 372d. It was the first to go over. Practically all its line officers, as well as privates, were colored.

They arrived in France on April 14 and went into training with the French on April 28. On June 6 the 372d was sent to the trenches just west of Verdun, occupying the famous battle-swept Hill 304 and sections at Four de Paris and Vauquois. On Hill 304 thousands of French and German soldiers had fallen as the battleline swung back and forward, and that this hill was given to the negroes to hold shows that as soldiers they had already won the confidence of the French.

The regiment's first engagement was in the Champagne sector, with Montoir as its objective. Here came the real test; the colored men were eager to get into the fight. They cheered and sang when the announcement came that their chance had arrived—but the question was: back of their enthusiasm had they the staying qualities drilled into European troops through centuries of training in the science of warfare?

The answer was that some of the heaviest and most effective fighting of the day was done by the negro regiment. From June 6 to Sept. 10 the 372d was stationed in the bloody Argonne Forest. On the night of Sept. 25 they were summoned to take part in the Argonne offensive and were in that terrific drive, one of the decisive engagements of the war, from Sept. 26 to Oct. 7. In the nine days' battle the negroes not only proved their fighting qualities in an ordeal such as men have rarely been called upon to face, but these qualities, in deadly striking power and stubborn resistance in crises, stood out with such distinction that the regiment won the coveted Croix de Guerre.

During the battle they aided in capturing 600 prisoners, fifteen big guns, twenty minenwerfers, rounded up an enormous amount of engineering material, large supplies of artillery munition, and brought down three German airplanes. For these achievements they were at once cited for bravery and efficiency in the General Orders issued by their French commander. The casualty list of the 372d in this and the previous fighting carried 500 names of men killed, wounded, and gassed.

Another regiment's record—that of the 369th, formerly the 15th New York, commanded by Colonel William Hayward, ex-Public Service Commissioner—reflects as high a credit on the soldierly qualities of the negro race. The 369th was in the Champagne offensive as a part of the Fourth Army, commanded by General Gouraud, a few miles west of the Argonne Forest. These are Colonel Hayward's own words describing the drive that tried out his men:

"At 5:25 A. M. the assault was launched, an assault that kept assaulting so far as our division was concerned for twelve days, in which we crossed rivers, captured towns, cut and climbed through acres and acres of barbed wire entanglements, stormed bluffs, ridges, and hills for fourteen kilometers, all the way facing stubborn and terribly effective artillery and machine gun fire.

"When we crossed the Dormois River, where it widened into a swamp, the boche was shelling industriously, and it looked like a hailstorm on the surface of the water. I saw shells break from concussion when they hit the water the same as on the ground. Much of the time we had to lean over and shout into each other's ears to be heard.

"At the end of twelve days we came out with our division, what was left of us, which included twenty-officers."

At the very last the 369th won another distinction. The following is from The Stars and Stripes, the organ of the American troops in France:

"The furthest north at 11 o'clock (when the armistice went into effect) on the front of the two armies was held at the extreme American left, up Sedan way, by the troops of the 77th Division. The furthest east—the nearest to the Rhine—was held by those negro soldiers who used to make up the old New York Fifteenth, and have long been brigaded with the French. They were in Alsace, and their line ran through Thann and across the railway that leads to Colmar."

How Negro Division Fights.

Next, to see a negro division in action:

The 92d Division was composed of the 183d Infantry Brigade, consisting of the 365th and 366th Infantry Regiments and the 350th Machine Gun Battalion; the 184th Infantry Brigade, composed of the 367th and 368th Infantry Regiments and the 351st Machine Gun Battalion; the 167th Artillery Brigade, consisting of the 349th, the 350th, and the 351st Artillery Regiments; and the 349th Machine Gun Battalion, the 317th Trench Mortar Battalion, the 317th Engineers' Regiment, the 317th Engineers' Train, the 317th Ammunition Train, the 317th Supply Train, the 317th Train Headquarters, the 92d Military Police Company; the 317th Sanitary Train, comprising the 365th, the 366th, the 367th, the 368th Field and Hospital and Ambulance Companies, 600 of the officers of the division were negroes.

Soon after the 92d was thoroughly organized it took over the Marbache sector. Here their activity in trench raids on the Germans earned from the Germans the name of "Black Devils." By these raids they drove the Germans north beyond Erehaut and Voivrotte to Cheminot bridge. In the hope of putting a check on these attacks the boches tried to destroy the bridge and flooded the country.

Up to this time the 92d had never been in a battle. The only regiment in it that had seen a big engagement was the 368th Infantry, which took part in the action in the Argonne Forest. The division's chance came in the drive on Metz. They were notified at 4 o'clock Sunday morning, Nov. 10. The motto, "See it through," of the "Buffaloes," the 367th Infantry, trained at Camp Upton, echoed through the whole division.

They began their advance at 7 o'clock from Pont-à-Mousson. Before them was a valley commanded by the heavy guns of Metz and by nests of German machine guns. The negroes seemed to realize that here for the first time was the great opportunity to show their mettle—that for the first time they were going to battle as a division. A sense of race solidarity possessed them, uniting their purpose as no amount of drilling could, and they were literally a terrible foe as they plunged forward to Preny. So rapidly did they advance that the list of casualties, considering the rain of shells, was small. Their objective for the day was Bois Frehaut. Picked Moroccan and Senegalese troops of the French, striking for the same point—in an odd competition of colored races on this day—were the first to arrive. The Germans, seeing what was up, were pounding Bois Frehaut with a heavy fire. It became too hot for the Moroccans and the Senegalese. They were forced to retreat.

Were our colored fighters really going to "see it through"? The fight was now getting hotter and hotter, for the Germans were bringing their full resistance to bear. The 56th Regiment was forced to withdraw, but not until after they had stood up and borne a heavy loss. The 1st Battalion of the "Buffaloes," commanded by Major Charles L. Appleton of New York, with colored company commanders and Lieutenants, was called upon to hold the Germans at bay while the hard-hit 56th retreated. Here, in confronting the enemy with an iron resistance, the "Buffaloes" won their Croix de Guerre.

A little later Bois Frehaut was taken by the 92d. The Germans directed against the place a more murderous fire, but there was no driving out the colored men. The Stars and Stripes said of this fight:

"Probably the hardest fighting done by any Americans in the final hour was that which engaged the troops of the 28th, 92d, 81st, and 7th Divisions of the Second American Army, who launched a fire-eating attack above Vigneulles just at dawn on the 11th. It was no mild thing that last flare of the battle, and the order to cease firing did not reach the men in the front line until the last moment, when the runners sped with it from fox hole to fox hole."

Numerous officers and privates of the 92d were commended for meritorious conduct by General Orders. During the final engagement of the war the negro division held the line of Vandières-St. Michel-Xon-Norry. The 92d suffered a total of 1,478 casualties.

NEW COURSES OPEN IN FOREIGN TRADE

NEW courses at New York University which are designed to help put America abreast of European countries in teaching the technique and the scientific aspect of foreign trade are part of the curriculum for the term which began Feb. 3.

These courses will be conducted at the Wall Street division of the university, 25 Broad Street. They have been shaped by Professor A. Wellington Taylor, director of the division, after obtaining the views of officials at Washington who are interested in making practical use of the new merchant marine.

"A good part of our inspiration for the new departure," said Professor Taylor, "came from aspiring young men who forced the subject upon our attention. They came to my office and told me that they saw an excellent opportunity for advancement in foreign trade work after our new merchant fleet is put to purely commercial uses, and asked me to outline university courses which they could take."

The new courses in the technique of foreign trade which will be taught will be supplemental to the general education training which especially bears on that subject and which may be obtained in other branches of the university. They are summarized in the bulletin of the Wall Street division as follows:

Foreign Trade—Selling methods, foreign advertising, document technique.

Shipping and Insurance—Charter parties and bills of lading, merchant marine administration and operation, marine insurance.

Banking and Finance—Foreign commercial banking, principles of foreign exchange, foreign exchange accounting.

Language—Spanish.

Modern languages in addition to Spanish may be acquired through instruction in other departments of the university.

"The immediate object," said Professor Taylor, "is to turn out men who can step immediately into important positions in exporting houses and banks which have foreign connections and perform their duties in successful competition with men occupying like positions abroad. If we can make even a small beginning in this respect, we think we shall be rendering an important service to our country.

"Because the unusual opportunities in domestic trade have prevented us hitherto from seeking to expand in foreign markets, as other nations have done, we have relatively few men who are practically trained to do successful work in the foreign field. Since our new merchant marine has reached proportions that had not come to us in our wildest dreams, and since the ships must obviously be kept busy in some way carrying foreign and American goods, we have a condition thrust upon us for which we are almost wholly unprepared.

"The customary method of training men in foreign trade through the apprentice system cannot give us men fast enough. If we begin the task with inexpert men and blunderers we shall imperil our national prestige and give a setback to the whole movement at the time when most of all it needs a spur.

"Many of the barriers which have hindered the highest development of the international exchange of goods have already disappeared as a result of the war, and new adjustments, which will make for greater commercial intercourse, in all probability will follow the Peace Conference."

NIGHT LETTER TELEGRAMS NOW BEING DELIVERED AS MAIL

Post Office Takes Them at Place of Destination, and the Government Spokesmen Even Claim Improvement in Service Through New Method

NIGHT letters" and "night messages" filed in telegraph offices are transformed into mail matter when reaching the cities of their destination. They are, theoretically, delivered in the early morning by postmen.

This practice, a development since the Federal Government took control of the telegraph companies, went into effect on Jan. 1, but it is doubtful if any large proportion of the public has become aware of the arrangement. Frequency of complaints indicate that knowledge of the new method has not percolated through the country.

Many patrons of the telegraph offices have made the discovery in a way similar to the following:

A man in Washington has some good news to send to his wife in New York. A letter would convey to her by the next day the news of the complete success of the husband's trip, but the facts were too full of life, of large, radiant promise to commit to the uncertain mail service; they could only properly be transmitted by the lightning-swift telegraph. So the New Yorker compressed a story of vivid detail into fifty words and "put it on the wire" at Washington as a night letter. He pictured the message arriving the next morning; the ring of the door bell, the eager fingers of his wife tearing open the yellow envelope, drinking in, like a flash from his mind to hers, the great news.

On the following day he received a letter from his wife which said:

"Your telegram arrived in the morning mail."

Though busy, the New Yorker determined to investigate. It was too much! He had paid for a telegram; he could have resorted to the mail himself.

At the telegraph office, when he had stated his case, the clerk politely referred to this, on the back of the telegram form:

> Special Terms Applying to Night Letters: In further consideration of the reduced rate of this special "Night Letter" service, the following terms, in addition to those enumerated above, are hereby agreed to:
> A. Night letters may at the option of the Telegraph Company be mailed at destination to the addresses, and the Company shall be deemed to have discharged its obligation in such cases with respect to delivery by mailing such Night Letters at destination, postage prepaid.

But, the New Yorker insisted, the message had been sent as a telegram, and he had paid 35 cents, instead of consigning it to the mail at a cost of 3; the postman was frequently late, and he chose a telegraph night letter in order that the important news he had to communicate would be delivered the first thing the next morning.

Another section of the contract on the back of the printed form was pointed out, applying to both night letters and night messages, and reading in part: "Accepted up to 2 A. M. for delivery on the morning of the ensuing business day."

"Then," the inquirer said, "if the postman had got around any time before noon the contract would have been filled, and if the next day had been Sunday my message would have had waited until the postman made his next round on Monday."

"As a matter of fact," commented the clerk, "by the special arrangement we have with the Post Office Department night letters and night messages are delivered now, on the whole, earlier in the morning than when we used our own messengers exclusively for this service. We send them around to the Post Office to go out in the first mail, and they, therefore, reach their destination usually between 9 and 10 o'clock. In cases where we see the mail delivery will be too late we still call upon our messengers."

"What should I have done to be assured that my message would be delivered as a telegram—by special messenger?"

"Sent it as a 'telegram,' which is our full rate expedited service. To New York the rate would have been 35 cents for the first ten words (which includes 5-cent war tax) and 2 cents for each additional word."

The new arrangement between the telegraph companies and the Post Office Department went into effect Jan. 1. They represent a plan for closer co-operation between the Post Office Department, worked out since the Government took over the telegraph companies. It was learned the other day at the Post Office Department in Washington that several large cities were picked out last Fall for an experiment in the delivery of night letters by the United States mail carriers. Postmasters in these cities were notified from Washington to confer with representatives of the telegraph companies there and come to an understanding as to the best way to try the idea out. Following these experiments the Postmaster General issued Order No. 2,349, as follows:

> The experimental delivery by letter carriers of "night letters" sent by telegraph to certain offices having city service having proved so satisfactory and resulted in improved and more efficient service to the public, the proper officer in charge of the telegraph service in cities having delivery service by letter carriers shall take up promptly with the local Postmasters the question of having "night letters" delivered by the letter carriers in their respective cities, also "night messages" after Jan. 1, 1919.

At the same time another order, No. 2,334, gave notice of the following reductions "for 'night messages' by telegraph," effective Jan. 1:

Where Telegram Rate Is	Present "Night Message" Rate Is	Rate Effective Jan. 1, 1919.
$0.25-2	$0.25-1	$0.20-1
.30-2	.25-1	.25.1
.35-2	.25-1	.25-1
.40-3	.30-2	.30-1
.50-3	.40-3	.35-1
.60-4	.50-3	.40-1
.75-5	.60-4	.45-2
1.00-7	None.	.50.2

To this was added: "Such 'night messages' shall be subject to Post Office carrier delivery. The change in nowise affects the rate on 'telegrams' sent at night."

Before the Government took over the telegraph companies, as a war measure until peace was declared, there was a natural rivalry between the telegraph service and the mail service, especially the special delivery branch. Last Spring the Post Office Department caused the Department of Justice to bring suit against the Western Union Telegraph Company for sending night letter telegrams by special messenger on trains from one city to another and then delivering them the next morning. This could only be attempted between points where the distance could be covered in a part-night run. The Post Office Department alleged that such a practice was an infringement of the Government's monopoly of carrying mail, the telegram so transported falling in the same class as the letter. The action against the company attracted wide attention, and general comment at the time was that the Government's position was well taken on the further ground that the understanding of those who used the telegraph companies' service was that the messages they handled would be forwarded over the wires.

In the city delivery of messages such as night-letter telegrams on which the agreement of the company does not call for delivery until the next morning, attempts had been made, by mailing them in the city of destination immediately after their arrival, to use the United States service instead of special messengers, but without the co-operation of the Post Office Department the results obtained were not great.

At the Post Office Department in Washington the statement was made last week that the reports thus far received on the working of the new plan were all favorable. The war had brought on a shortage of messengers and this had made it difficult at times for the companies to get their messages out promptly; besides, there was duplication of service with the companies' messengers and the postmen going over the same route at the same hours in the morning.

"In order to assure the best results in such a co-operation between the Post Office Department and the telegraph companies, is not a preference being given to the telegraph night messages and night letters over other first class mail?" was asked.

"No," was the answer. "They bring their night letters and messages to us, bearing a two-cent stamp just as any other intra-city mail does, and we send it out by the first morning delivery as we would any other mail consigned to us in time for early morning distribution. If we sent the telegrams out by our special delivery messages, that would be showing a preference."

Whether this arrangement of close co-operation is to continue after the telegraph companies are restored to private control, as it now seems likely Congress will order done on Dec. 31, 1919, is not known, but nothing would prevent the telegraph companies from mailing their night letters and messages early in the morning as they do now. Had the prospect of continued Government control seemed likely, further co-operation in the delivery of telegraph messages was under consideration, it was learned, by which the Post Offices' messengers for special delivery letters would have been employed wherever possible for distributing straight telegraph messages.

"But," said the representative of the Post Office Department, "that could not have been carried out unless we were all in the same building. What we looked forward to was the time when the City Post Office and the telegraph companies as a part of them would be housed in the same building. Then many duplications could be cut out which were not possible during this period of control."

The delivery by the Post Office Department of telegraph night letters and night messages started a report that between cities separated by a short night run telegrams were being transported by the mail service. This had not been done, nor even considered by the Post Office Department, it is asserted. Furthermore, with the great majority of night messages this could not be done on account of the distance between the points of filing and of destination.

AMERICAN WOMAN'S BATTLE-ZONE VISIT

MRS. IRVING T. BUSH, just arrived from Bordeaux, is among the first woman civilians to have visited the devastated battlefields of France. She accompanied her husband, Irving T. Bush, President of the Bush Terminal Company, who sailed from here to be in Paris during the Peace Conference. Mrs. Bush is an executive officer of the National League for Women's Service.

It was Mrs. Bush's good fortune to traverse the region where our boys stormed the heights of the Meuse in the face of the deadliest fire and attained their objective against well-nigh superhuman odds. She was conducted over the Meuse battlefields by Colonel R. John West, who commanded the 11th Artillery, the second American regiment to cross the river, and who won the Distinguished Service Order for bravery in action.

"A stupendous task was assigned to our men," said Mrs. Bush, "General Foch admitted that they had a hard nut to crack when General Pershing asked to be assigned to this particular sector with the eventual object of cutting the German's main line of communication—which they did. Our boys 'went to it' with the wonderful American spirit which they exhibited all through the war.

"A great many persons who motor to Château-Thierry, which is only about forty miles from Paris, think they have seen the battlefront. It will always be a historic spot. But the actual fighting fronts, where the final scenes of the great war drama were staged, are much more difficult of access, and, to visit them, one must spend from two to three nights on the trip, while one can motor to the Château-Thierry region, and even visit Rheims, in one day.

"We visited Belleau Wood, immortalized in history by the gallant fighting of our American marines. Here the desolation was tragic. All the dead of the American and French forces were gathered together in little graveyards, the French graves marked by a circle with the Tricolor and the Americans' with a shield bearing our national colors. In some cases perhaps one hundred men were buried in a trench, right where they fell, the grave marked by a cross. This was frequently necessary, but was done with the utmost respect and care.

"It was late and misty when we reached Rheims, but not too dark to note the desecration of the cathedral. Some portions, strange to say, were wholly unscathed. It suggested the wake of a cyclone which for some unaccountable reason strikes in one place and not in another. We spent the night at Châlons and then went on to the Argonne region, which baffles description. I shall never forget it as long as I live.

"The shell-torn land was like nothing so much as an arid desert where one could look over acres and acres of country with not a vestige of a town left. You would naturally think some barriers or lines of demarkation might be seen, but it seemed as if it was nothing but one shellhole blown into another and then blown back again into a third. Excavations, some as big as a house, were filled with slime and ooze. I don't see how any one could walk across it, much less fight across it.

"We went to Montfaucon and stood in the door of the church whence, it is said, the Crown Prince watched the battle of Verdun. Near by was the wreck of a dugout, all that was left of a 'Y' hut. A group of doughboys were there identifying graves. They had located all on their list except one Captain. We shared our lunch with them and they gave us coffee from their canteens. One of the doughboys told me that, on that very spot, he had seen eight boys, who were standing in line in front of the 'Y' hut to get refreshments, killed by one shell.

"When you stand by the Meuse and look up at the hill which dominated the advance of the Americans at this point you wonder how any of them escaped the fire of the machine guns that swept the sector with deadly range.

"Hereabout all the débris of war's fiercest conflict lies where it fell, as the enemy struck his last desperate blow. Gruesome souvenirs of the war bestrew the ground, and we brought home a few things, like shell cases, helmets, and small unexploded shells. Two German helmets were still clotted with blood, and I had to have those things in the car with me for two days.

"One reason why there was objection to civilians visiting this region was on account of the danger, for there are unexploded shells lying everywhere. I saw among the débris something that looked as much like a little brass smelling-salts bottle as anything. The top was scalloped all around in a really ornate manner, and I picked it up. Colonel West saw me, and came running toward me. 'I was afraid you might drop it,' he exclaimed breathlessly. 'It is an unexploded shell, and might have blown you to atoms.' It was interesting just as an indication of the infinite pains that the Germans took with even the smallest of their infernal inventions.

"Strewn over the battlefield were parts of soldiers' equipment, dead horses, and—yes, dead Germans—two were found as I stood there.

"When I think of the physical suffering the soldiers must have undergone from exposure to the frightful weather conditions I wonder how they ever came out alive. I have seen where they stood in the trenches up to their waists in water. I have seen where they fought with it breast-high, benumbed with cold, often parched with thirst.

Salvage on Battlefields.

"The way the French are salvaging the war waste of the battlefields is most interesting. Nothing, not so much as a piece of cloth, is wasted. All the débris is being sorted out. Cannon, machine guns, rails, barbed wire, everything, in fact, is saved and turned to account."

ARMY ANIMALS

SOME idea of what has been done in furnishing horses and mules for overseas service may be gained from a report made by the Statistical Section of the Remount Division. This shows that up to Jan. 11, 1919, there had been shipped overseas from this country a total of 67,948 animals. This included 5,489 cavalry horses, 33,396 draft horses, 28,088 draft mules, and 975 pack mules. The total number of animals lost en route overseas, so far reported, is 600 horses and mules, or less than 1 per cent. of the total number of animals shipped.

The total of animals purchased overseas to date is 152,336. Purchases of horses in France totaled 109,848; in Spain, 1,5[illegible]1, and in Great Britain, 11,898. The value of purchases in France was $4,12[illegible]093,.52; in Spain, $598,159.96, and in Great Britain, $5,314,711.15—a total value of $49,025,964.63 for 123,277 horses purchased overseas.

The total number of mules purchased overseas was 29,059; their total value was $11,115,846.72. Nine thousand three hundred and forty-one mules, valued at $2,895,927.[illegible]6, were purchased in France; 12,941 mules, valued at $5,619,155.74, were purchased in Spain, and 6,777, valued at $2,600,763.22, were purchased in Great Britain.

The American Expeditionary Forces had on hand on Dec. 25, 1918, a total of 191,631 animals. This total included 26,023 cavalry horses, 109,528 draft horses, 4[illegible],614 draft mules, and 7,466 pack and riding mules. The total loss overseas to Dec. 25, 1918, amounted to 42,311 animals, which included 36,189 horses and 6,122 mules.

No arrangements have yet been made by any foreign Government for taking over the animals belonging to the United States which are now in Europe. The matter has been informally discussed in this country, and the Remount Division was informed that no objections would be raised if the animals should be turned over to our allies, as there is an ample supply of animals in this country.

Plans are now being outlined by the Remount Division for the encouragement of horse breeding in this country with a view to supplying suitable cavalry and artillery horses in the future. Reports from the Bureau of Animal Industry show that there were 2.9 per cent. more horses and 8.4 per cent. more mules on the farms in the United States on Jan. 1, 1918, than on Jan. 1, 1914. According to reports, there is no appreciable decrease in the number of animals in the rural districts of England, but there is about a 20 per cent. decrease from prewar figures in France.

POLES CELEBRATE KOSCIUSZKO DAY

Birthday Anniversary of Patriot Who Fought for Poland's Freedom as Well as America's Widely Observed

The one hundred and seventy-fourth anniversary of Thaddeus Kosciuszko, the Polish nobleman who fought valiantly for the colonies in the revolution, and who constructed the first fortifications at West Point, will fall on Wednesday, Feb. 12. Poles throughout the United States will celebrate the occasion because this year marks the freeing of Poland, for which Kosciuszko also fought in his day, and because the United States has just recognized the new Poland.

By MAJ. GEN. W. M. BLACK,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

THADDEUS KOSCIUSZKO, who was born in Lithuania in 1746, and was educated in the military school of Warsaw, came to America in 1776, under the auspices of Franklin, and was appointed an aide on the staff of Washington. Being an artillerist and engineer by education and training, he was soon afterward appointed by Congress as an engineer with the rank of Colonel in the Continental Army.

Later Kosciuszko became a General of Brigade and served throughout the American Revolutionary War. He took part in the siege of New York, was chief engineer under Gates in the campaign against Burgoyne and selected the position where the former made his heroic and successful stand against the invader. He was then placed in charge of the construction of the fortifications at West Point on the Hudson. Later he served as chief engineer under Greene in the South, and was finally with Washington again at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

At the close of the war in 1783 Kosciuszko received the thanks of Congress and was appointed Major General by brevet. He was also admitted to citizenship and to the Order of the Cincinnati.

Returning to Poland the following year, Kosciuszko became identified with the Polish revolution. He rose to the rank of Major General under Poniatowski, later became Lieutenant General and finally Commander in Chief of the revolutionists. After conducting many brilliant campaigns against great odds, where his superior engineering genius played an important part, he was finally, in 1794, captured by the Russians and imprisoned at St. Petersburg.

After liberation he again visited the United States and received a grant of land from Congress. He returned to Europe in 1798 on a mission from Congress to the French Government and contributed much to a better understanding between the two countries.

Kosciuszko died in Switzerland in 1817 and was buried in Warsaw with the highest honors. He was the author of "Manoeuvres for the Horse Artillery," and a description of the campaign of 1792 (Poland.)

One of the foremost engineers of the American Revolution, Kosciuszko is best known and remembered for his construction of the fortifications of West Point. After West Point had been so easily captured by the British in the early part of the war its importance as the key to the water route to Canada was appreciated. Fortifications were begun under the direction of a French engineer, Colonel Radiere, who was soon forced to give up his project. Kosciuszko was then placed in charge and later had as an assistant an American engineer, Colonel Putnam, who had been with him during the campaign against Burgoyne and whose name the largest fortress bore.

Fragments of Kosciuszko's works still remain at West Point and the smaller works have been partially restored. On the northeast angle of Fort Clinton parapet stands a monument erected in his honor in 1828 by the Corps of Cadets. In 1913 the shaft was surmounted by a bronze statue of the patriot. Just north of Cullum Memorial Hall a flight of stone steps leads down to a shelving plateau, overhung with foliage, still known as "Kosciuszko's Garden," said by tradition to have been his favorite haunt and now much frequented by the cadets.

COURAGE, DASH, AND VICTORY IN FIRST DIVISION'S RECORD

Story of American Regulars Who Led the Way to France and Whose Casualties of All Kinds Reached 23,974, Including 715 Officers

By MAJOR GEN. A. W. GREELY,
United States Army, Retired.

THERE is no division of the American Expeditionary Forces that has failed to display in the face of the enemy the qualities of courage, discipline, and efficiency which are acknowledged attributes of the American Army. It is natural and commendable that war correspondents and local newspapers should loudly and proudly acclaim the achievements of the military organizations identified with and formed in their own communities. It would be an injustice to the rank and file of our citizen soldiery if their own sections failed to display pride, especially in the combat divisions.

Thus New England honors the 26th Division, New York the 27th and 77th, Pennsylvania the 28th, Michigan and Wisconsin the 32d, Kansas and Missouri the 35th, Ohio the 37th, and the Pacific States the 91st, to mention only those of greatest losses.

It should be borne in mind, however, that certain organizations are entitled to general recognition for their soldierly merits, as they present to the world by the men of their ranks a thoroughly homogeneous army, gathered from all sections and all races of our composite nation. These troops are of the so-called regular army, whose ranks are now filled almost to a man by volunteers for service only in the great war. It is not generally known that the war casualties of these organizations—battle and disease—have depleted their ranks from 25 to 100 per cent. of their original personnel. These vast gaps have been filled by drafts from the replacement divisions of selected men, thus making the regulars truly national organizations.

That the public may appreciate the fibre and metal of these representative troops, formed by such a national consolidation, it appears desirable and of timely interest that the achievements of a typical regular division should be briefly if somewhat inadequately described.

For this purpose the 1st Division is selected, not that its bravery is superior, its discipline better, or its morale higher than mark the others, but because it was the first division to reach France, first to serve in trench warfare, first to fire a hostile shell, first to lose a man, first to capture a prisoner, first to repel a German raid, first to man an independent sector, and first to recapture a town (Cantigny) and hold it against all counterattacks.

The Officers in Command.

Sailing from Hoboken on June 24, 1917, the 1st Division reached St. Nazaire, at the mouth of the Loire, on the 24th of that month. The division, 27,000 strong, was trained by General W. L. Sibert of Alabama, but went into actual war service under General Robert Lee Bullard, also of Alabama, with Colonel Campbell King of Georgia as Chief of Staff. The 1st Brigade, 16th and 18th Regular Infantry, was commanded by General John L. Hines of West Virginia, and the 2d Brigade by General Beaumont B. Buck of Texas. The artillery brigade, the 5th, 6th, and 7th Regiments of Field Artillery, was finally put under Colonel W. A. Holbrook of Wisconsin. In addition, there were the 1st Regiment of Engineers, the 1st, 2d, and 3d Machine Gun Battalions, a headquarters troop of cavalry, Signal Corps, field battalions, and medical units.

Unskilled in methods of modern war and unprovided with field artillery, the division was scattered to suitable camps where they were intensively instructed by experienced officers from the French Army. That such training involved physical hardships, uncomplainingly endured, is evident from Major Palmer's statement that some of the men, in want of new shoes, drilled with their feet wrapped in sacking. The field artillery had to unlearn their own drill and acquire expert skill with the remarkable but novel French gun, the famous soixante quinze, 75mm. A French officer commented on the high intelligence and extraordinary aptitude of his artillery pupils.

Three months later, with coming Winter and almost continuous rains, the division was inducted in trench warfare, serving under French command, a short distance southeast of Nancy. The usual horrors of trench life were experienced, though their vitality and methods prevented any material increase in the sick. Here the first hostile shell was fired by Battery C, 6th Field Artillery, on Oct. 23, 1917. The Germans on Nov. 3 by a barrage cut off the advanced outpost and captured eleven prisoners. The command, rallying, repelled the enemy. Trench service, rendered by battalion detail for ten days each, was marked by 56 casualties—3 killed, 43 wounded and 11 captured. One German prisoner was taken. The casualties herein given include killed, wounded, gassed, missing, and prisoners, but not by disease, accidents, &c.

The trench apprenticeship was followed by independent service Jan. 15-April 3, 1918, about twelve miles northwest of Toul, in a sector near St. Mihiel. Here the 1st Division relieved the famous Moroccan Division, co-operating with the 69th French. The Toul service entailed constant losses with small chance of reprisal. The front was dominated by the St. Mihiel hills, of which Mount Sec was the key, strongly held by German batteries within easy range. Major Palmer tersely describes the situation: "It was like sitting at the foot of the stairs and having the fellow at the top throw rocks at you from behind a curtain." Occasional incursions into No Man's Land were made, whereby eleven prisoners were captured with machine guns and flame throwers. In this quiet sector the 1st Division had 352 casualties—56 killed, 150 wounded, 127 gassed, and 19 missing.

Hastily Shifted to Picardy.

The vast and dangerous offensive launched by the German command on March 21, 1918, called the division into extremely active service. On March 28 General Pershing offered the American force, in its entirety to General Foch, and a week later the 1st made its great journey half across France to Picardy. It was a test of administrative ability, met successfully by Pershing's quartermasters, to move with its essential accompanying paraphernalia 27,000 men, 1,700 animals, and 1,000 wagons. Turning over its sector to the 26th New England Division the 1st made this transfer of more than 300 miles, and was in Picardy, near Beauvais, on April 18.

How it was done no one knows, for the railroads were swamped with ammunition, reinforcements, supplies, &c., for 3,000,000 men, while the roads—in awful condition—were jammed with ambulances, motors, fugitives, and troops. It was nearly confusion confounded between withdrawals before the enemy, the evacuation of the occupied provinces, and transfers of troops to meet exigences. But the 1st got there, both fit and equipped to fight.

Kept for a time in reserve, the First occupied the Cantigny front—April 25-July 7—three miles west of Montdidier, then strongly held by the enemy. The operations of the division in this sector are popularly supposed to have been confined, as far as fighting went, to the capture of Cantigny, which was a mere episode involving only one-fifth of the casualties here suffered. The First was put in line opposite the very apex of the most advanced German salient, with orders to hold it at all costs. If the front gave way Amiens, a few miles to the northwest, would fall and its railway system be destroyed. The fatal effect would be the diversion to southern France of all the supplies needful for the British Army, which was then receiving from the Channel ports everything needful for all forces north of the Somme.

Constant fighting, though on a small scale, continued almost daily until early June. The front had to be kept against preponderating and victorious enemies, who, holding both banks of the Avre, were within easy cannon shot of Amiens. The First not only gave no ground in the repeated attacks of the enemy, but it made them pay toll, capturing from its columns sixty prisoners and three machine guns. It paid dear, however, as its casualties—omitting those in the capture of Cantigny—numbered 140 officers and 4,183 men; killed, 199; wounded, 1,621; gassed, 1,999; missing, 49. The few missing show that the men fought to the last.

How Cantigny Was Taken.

The division commander viewed with dissatisfaction the occupation by the enemy of the village of Cantigny. Admirably organized and strongly fortified by the Germans, its high ground dominated both the American front and also sections in the rear. Whenever another advance was made, and it was daily expected, Cantigny was an excellent jumping-off place for a great assault. If it could be captured and held its value for a counteroffensive was strikingly evident. Preparations for its capture were systematically made.

At daybreak on May 28 the division artillery opened a terrific bombardment which drove the enemy to their shelters. At 6:30 A. M. the troops went over the top as the artillery fire pulled back to an initial barrage a hundred yards in advance of the moving line. Colonel Ely, with the 28th Infantry, and Lieut. Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., with a battalion of the 26th Infantry, moved forward with clock-work regularity, fifty-five yards a minute. Each man had food for two days, ample water, much ammunition, and intrenching tools. The town was taken within an hour, when began immediately the consolidation so essential, as counterattacks were certain. The engineer detachments wired under fierce fire the trenches occupied, while the men of the Signal Corps spread their cobweb lines to insure telephonic communication with the rear.

To take Cantigny was easy compared with holding it. Six counterattacks were made by the exasperated Germans, without success. Fierce artillery fire soon reduced Cantigny to a mass of formless ruins, but the Americans held fast, repelling the enemy, who ceased their efforts after losing over 1,300 men killed and wounded, besides 225 prisoners. The casualties of the first numbered 1,067: killed, 199; wounded, 652; gassed, 200; missing, 16. Heroically fighting after being wounded, Lieut. Col. Maxey, Lieutenant Drum, and Corporal Finnegan were killed.

Importance of Cantigny Capture.

A small affair, seemingly, Cantigny's capture was a matter of great and international importance. There could not have been a more timely victory, for on that very morning the last German success was attained. Going over the top of the Chemin des Dames, their shock troops drove the allied forces down the Marne to Château-Thierry, and thus placed Paris in imminent danger of capture. At this critical and disheartening period it fell to the lot of the 1st Division of the American Expeditionary Forces to prove to the anxious allied nations that a counteroffensive was possible, and that victory was yet to be gained for the free men of the world.

For a few days a part of the 1st Division turned from scenes of war to parade in Paris on July 4.

Three days later urgent orders put the 1st Division on the march. For four days and nights it went on without any regular rest, now on trucks, now hiking. Of the men's physical condition near the end one of its officers writes: "The dismounted men would fall asleep in the gutter at every halt. The mounted men dozed in their saddles, and the animals could scarcely drag one foot after another. When a chance for food came most men hit the hay, though too tired to sleep." The afternoon found them ten miles in rear of the battle line, which they were ordered to occupy, so as to go over the top at daybreak.

Foch had perfected his plans for a counteroffensive. The march to their assigned positions had to be secretly made over unknown roads, through fields and forest, without a gleam of light, lest the enemy note the movement. To add to the troubles, a thunderstorm soaked their clothing and made the shell-ruined roads veritable quagmires. In utter darkness thousands of men, hundreds of horses and of motor trucks, jammed the road in almost inextricable masses. It was feared that some units could not reach the line in time to go over the top, fixed at 4:35 A. M. One unit barely reached the front at 4:30 and went over almost exhausted.

In Foch's Great Offensive.

It was known that the fighting would be desperate, as it involved attacks on fortified heights held by an enemy flushed with victory and confident of continued success. Hundreds of camouflaged nests of machine guns, heavy batteries in positions of natural strength, caused the enemy to believe their terrain impregnable. It rested on the courage and persistence of the American soldier to prove this a fallacy.

The division entered the counteroffensive under its new commander, General Charles P. Summerall of Florida, distinguished as one of the captors of Peking in 1900. It was sandwiched between the 153d French on the left, and the veteran Moroccan division on its right with the Foreign Legion.

At 4:35 A. M. the 1st went over the top in extended order of five paces interval. The artillery, hitherto silent, started a rolling barrage which, systematically lifted a hundred yards a minute, drove the enemy to their shelters. Advancing as planned, and leaving small parties from time to time to clean up the snipers and machine guns, the main body attained its first objective and halted twenty minutes as allotted. Night found them at the third objective, about three miles advance, having smashed through the wire barricades and fortifications constructed the previous six weeks. Scarcely a thousand casualties, and more than that number of prisoners with many guns, were the record of the day. The 6th German, 11th and 42d Bavarian Divisions were that night reinforced by the 34th and 28th Divisions, presaging warm work for the morrow.

On July 20 still another German division, the 46th, confronted the 1st. As it had outrun the 153d French in advance, the 1st Division was asked to take the village of Berzy-le-Sec, which had been assigned as a French objective. This village was a fortified place, which dominated the Soissons-Oulchy-le-Château Railway, and its capture meant the loss to the Germans of the entire salient. It involved desperate work, and that day failed. The fighting was intense, often at close quarters, when grenades, bayonets, knives, and even clubbed rifles were used. To and fro swayed the struggling masses, with slight and dearly gained advances by our men. The American casualties had now run up to 3,000, about the number of prisoners captured by them. With nightfall Berzy was still uncaptured, and the Moroccan division was relieved, which was also the orders of the 1st. Summerall, however, told the corps commander that he had promised his men that they should go on and was unwilling to leave victory half gained.

Victory on Soissons Highway.

The losses of the 2d Brigade had been enormous among its officers, as nearly all had been killed or wounded. However, on the morning of the 21st, General Buck paraded his exhausted and decimated command, and, walking down its front under heavy fire, led them in assault. They swept into Berzy-le-Sec, capturing its men, batteries, and machine guns, and winning the most important objective. Meantime the 1st Brigade had overrun the Soissons-Château-Thierry highway, leaving no hope to the demoralized enemy. Victory then and for the future was assured.

The perfidy and the contemptible methods of the Germans appear from a report by an officer of the division. The moans of a wounded German attracted the attention of an officer in the advance, and in response to his pitiful appeals first-aid treatment was given. The officer went on to join his command, and a few hundred yards further a companion officer called out that he had been shot from the rear. It developed that the German, refreshed by first-aid treatment, had crawled up to the shell-hole and, resting his machine gun on the edge, opened fire on our troops. Just punishment of the treacherous soldier was rendered needless. A German shell exploded and killed him.

One prisoner was brought in with his high leather boots full of grenades and his right arm adorned with a Red Cross badge.

The captures included 125 officers, 3,375 men; 75 guns, 77 mm. and 150 mm.; 50 mortars; 300 machine guns; 2,500 rifles, with much ammunition and supplies. The price paid was the heaviest to date of any division, 7,840 in all; killed, 1,252; wounded, 4,771; gassed, 274, and missing, 1,543. One officer to every sixteen men was killed—an extraordinary proportion.

Many officers and men were cited by Division orders, and to others, Distinguished Service Crosses were issued by order of President Wilson.

This victory of the First against six German divisions was naturally followed by recognition. Buck and Hines became Major Generals, and Holbrook a Brigadier. The Chief of Staff, Campbell King, was made Brigadier and succeeded by Colonel John [illegible] Greely, General Staff, who, cited "for distinguished ability while performing duties of grave responsibility," served in that position until the armistice was signed.

Quiet service for assimilation of about 8,000 replacements was had in the Saizera sector during August, the casualties numbering only twenty-one. The St. Mihiel operation, Sept. 12-15, was not entirely the picnic that has been sometimes assumed. Familiar with this terrain from their earliest service, the First Division had an important share in the capture of the salient. Against resistance they advanced eight miles in nineteen hours, and their reconnoitering party twelve miles. Their casualties were 11 officers and 761 men. They captured 5 officers, 1,190 men, 30 77mm. and 150mm. guns, and much war material.

Moved up by easy stages, the First Division took station at Cheppy, awaiting its fiercest fighting between the Argonne Forest and the Meuse River. A serious emergency arose, and its orders came. Entering this sector, it fought continually from Oct. 1 to Oct. 12, under conditions of undescribable difficulties, over a terrain capable of easy defence and against the best German divisions, who knew that defeat there meant the absolute loss of the war. The situation is best set forth by General Pershing in General Order 201, the only order devoted during the war to a single command. It begins:

> The Commander in Chief desires to make of record * * * his extreme satisfaction with the conduct of the officers and soldiers of the 1st Division in its advance west of the Meuse between Oct. 4 and 11, 1918.

The First Division paid a fearful price for its Argonne victory, the casualties numbering 8,554, of whom 117 were officers. Killed, 851; wounded severely, 2,664; wounded slightly, 1,710; gassed, 1,614; missing, (mostly dead it is thought,) 1,715. One of every three!

Ordinarily this would have been the end of a division for months, but the First answered promptly for an emergency in the operations against Nouzon and Sedan, (Nov. 3-8,) where it sustained losses of 1,087, and captured fifty-four men, guns, &c.

Summarized, its war casualties, killed, wounded, gassed and missing, aggregated 23,974, of whom 715 were officers. Its losses by disease are unknown, but the total replacements slightly exceed 30,000.

The armistice signed, the First Division left Abincourt, near Verdun, six days later, and by a march of more than 200 miles occupied the Coblenz bridgehead on Dec. 24. It was the first American force to cross the Rhine.

February Sale of Furniture

It is a fortunate co-incidence that the FEBRUARY SALE this year comes just at a time when we find it advisable to cut down the ENORMOUS STOCK that war conditions for the past eighteen months made necessary. This surplus stock, much of it purchased at LOW PRE-WAR PRICES, all goes into this sale at substantial REDUCTIONS ranging from 20 per cent to 50 per cent, making this an unusual opportunity, and one which our LIBERAL CREDIT brings within the reach of every one.

SAYINGS OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT

From the Outset of His Public Life the Late ex-President Was Noted for His Ability to Score His Point with Clarity and Positiveness

"ROOSEVELT DAY"

TODAY has been officially set aside in honor of the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, who became President of the United States on the death of William McKinley, Sept. 14, 1901, and who was elected to the office on Nov. 8, 1904.

I INTEND to vote the Republican Presidential ticket. A man cannot act both without and within the party; he can do either, but he cannot possibly do both. Each course has its advantages, and each has its disadvantages, and one cannot take the advantages or the disadvantages separately. I went in with my eyes open to do what I could within the party; I did my best and got beaten, and I propose to stand by the result.

—From a statement in 1884, when Roosevelt was 25, during the Blaine-Cleveland campaign. Roosevelt had supported Edmunds for the nomination against Blaine.

"A Square Deal"

A MAN who is good enough to shed his blood for the country is good enough to be given a square deal afterwards.

—From the "Life of Benton," 1886.

THE man who becomes Europeanized, who loses his power of doing good work on this side of the water and who loses his love for his native land is not a traitor, but he is a silly and undesirable citizen.

—From "American Ideals," 1897.

UNQUESTIONABLY no community that is actually diminishing in numbers is in a healthy condition, and as the world is now, with huge waste places still to fill up with much of the competition between the races reducing itself to the warfare of the cradle, no race has any chance to win a great place unless it consists of good breeders as well as of good fighters.

—From "American Ideals," 1897.

WE do not wish, in politics, in literature, or in art, to develop that unwholesome parochial spirit, that overexaltation of the little community at the expense of the great nation, which produces what has been described as the patriotism of the village, the patriotism of the belfry. * * * The patriotism of the village or the belfry is bad, but the lack of all patriotism is even worse.

—From "American Ideals," 1897.

PEACE is a goddess only when she comes with a sword girt on thigh.

—From "American Ideals," 1897.

I WISH to preach, not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life, the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach that highest form of success which comes, not to the man who desires mere easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from danger, from hardship, or from bitter toil, and who out of these wins the splendid ultimate triumph.

—From "The Strenuous Life," 1900.

When at the White House

THE mechanism of modern business is so delicate that extreme care must be taken not to interfere with it in a spirit of rashness or ignorance. Many of those who have made it their vocation to denounce the great industrial combinations, which are popularly, although with technical inaccuracy, known as "trusts," appeal especially to hatred and fear. These are precisely the two emotions, particularly when combined with ignorance, which unfit men for the exercise of cool and steady judgment.

—From first annual message, Dec. 3, 1901.

WHEN home ties are loosened, when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed, and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living; then evil days for the commonwealth are at hand. There are regions in our land, and classes of our population, where the birth rate has sunk below the death rate. Surely it should need no demonstration to show that willful sterility is, from the standpoint of the human race, the one sin for which the penalty is national death, race death; a sin for which there is no atonement.

—From sixth annual message, Dec. 3, 1906.

AS I emphatically disbelieve in seeing Harvard or any other college turn out mollycoddles instead of vigorous men, I may add that I do not in the least object to a sport because it is rough.

—From a speech at Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 23, 1907.

THIS nation should help in every practicable way in the education of the Chinese people, so that the vast and populous Empire of China may gradually adapt itself to modern conditions. * * * Our educators should, so far as possible, take concerted action to this end.

—From seventh annual message, Dec. 3, 1907.

THERE is no moral difference between gambling at cards or in lotteries or on race track and gambling in the stock market. One method is just as pernicious to the body politic as the other kind, and in degree the evil worked is far greater.

—From special message, Jan. 31, 1908.

THERE is a homely old adage which runs: "Speak softly and carry a big stick: you will go far." If the American Nation will speak softly, and yet build, and keep at a pitch of the highest training a thoroughly efficient navy, the Monroe Doctrine will go far.

—From addresses and messages.

LET us all strive, according to our ability and as far as conditions will permit, to secure to the man of one color who behaves uprightly and honestly, with thrift and with foresight, the same opportunity for reward and for living his life under the protection of the law and without molestation by outsiders, that would be his if he were of another color. The avenues of employments should be open to one as to the other; the protection of the laws should be guaranteed to one as to the other.

—From a speech at Washington, Nov. 26, 1908.

What He Said in Europe

THE deadening effect on any race of the adoption of a logical and extreme socialistic system could not be overstated; it would spell sheer destruction; it would produce grosser wrong and outrage, fouler immorality than any existing system. But this does not mean that we may not with great advantage adopt certain of the principles proposed by some given set of men who happen to call themselves Socialists; to be afraid to do so would be to make a mark of weakness on our part.

—From the Sorbonne address, April 23, 1910.

ONE of the prime dangers of civilization has always been its tendency to cause the loss of the virile fighting qualities, of the fighting edge. When men get too comfortable and lead too luxurious lives, there is always danger lest the softness eat like an acid into their manliness of fibre. The barbarian, because of the very conditions of his life, is forced to keep and develop certain hardy qualities which the man of civilization tends to lose, whether he be clerk, factory hand, merchant, or even a certain type of farmer.

—University of Berlin address, May 12, 1910.

IN our complex industrial civilization of today the peace of righteousness and justice, the only kind of peace worth having, is at least as necessary in the industrial world as it is among nations. There is at least as much need to curb the cruel greed and arrogance of part of the world of capital, to curb the cruel greed and violence of part of the world of labor, as to check a cruel and unhealthy militarism in international relationships.

—From the University of Berlin address, May 12, 1910.

THERE are certain problems which both of us [Great Britain and America] have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British Isles in his various homes across the sea, and the American, both at home and abroad are brought into contact with utterly alien peoples, some with a civilization more ancient than our own, others still in, or having but recently arisen from, the barbarism which our people left behind ages ago.

It would be foolish indeed to pay heed to the unwise persons who desire disarmament to be begun by the very people who, of all others, should not be left helpless before any possible foe. But we must reprobate quite as strongly both the leaders and the peoples who practice, or encourage, or condone, aggression and iniquity by the strong at the expense of the weak. We should tolerate lawlessness and wickedness neither by the weak nor by the strong; and both weak and strong we should in return treat with scrupulous fairness.

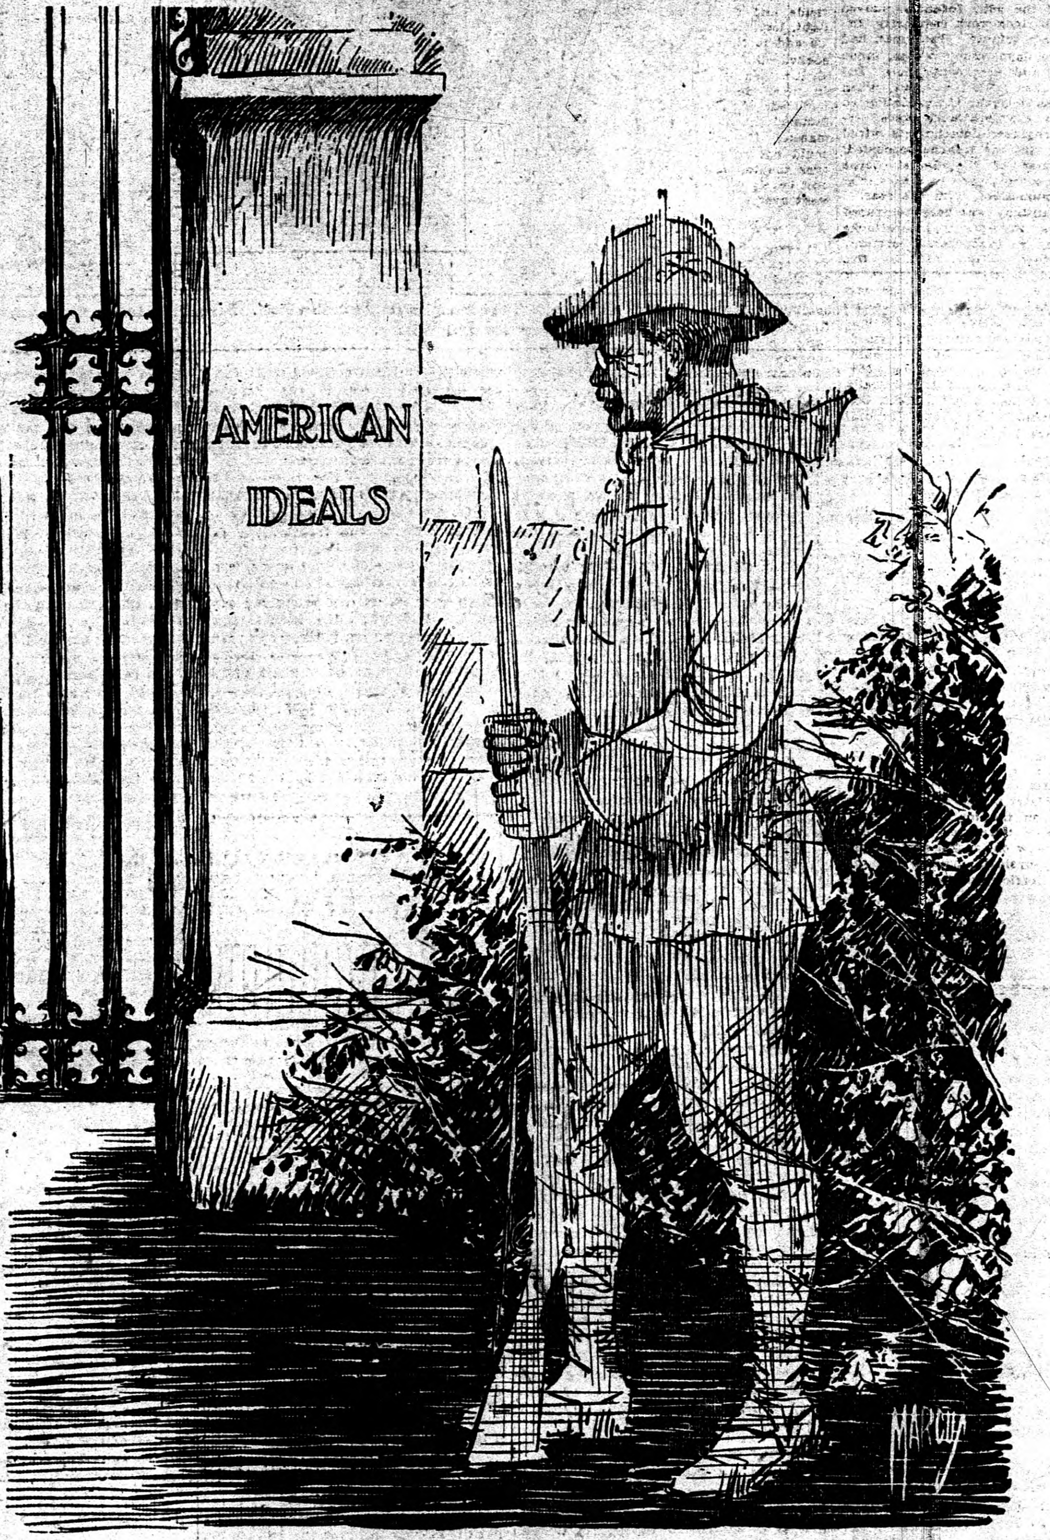
—From an address at Oxford University, England, June 7, 1910.

The New Nationalism

ALL that the new Nationalism means is the application of certain old-time moralities to the changed conditions of the day. I wish to see greater governmental efficiency because we have to deal with greater business efficiency. Simple laws are all that are necessary in small communities where there is no big business and each man works for himself. When you get masses of wealth gathered together and great corporations developing, conditions then become so changed that there must be an increase in governmental activity to control the wealth for business efficiency. I would not do wrong to the great corporation, but I don't intend to rely only on the big corporation's good nature to see that the corporation doesn't do harm against us. I want to see such control of the wealth now gathered for business uses as to favor the honest man who uses the wealth genuinely for the service of the public and to make the dishonest man feel that he has to do what is right; and if he doesn't feel it, we shall see to it that he does. That is my whole creed.

—From speech at Riverhead, L. I., Sept. 15, 1910.

THE SILENT WATCH



ROOSEVELT—THE LEADER

> "I was ever a fighter, so one fight more and the last;
> I should hate that death bandaged my eyes; in silence
> made me creep past;
> No, let me fare like my peers, the heroes of old."

From her red veins the Mother fashioned him
In gay mood of her richest burgeoning;
No stinting made she of her treasure-house,
But moulded him to quick warm sympathies,
To valiant purposes, broad-shouldered deeds.

Into his heart she poured her flaming East,
Wine of her West, her North, her tremulous South;
Matched in him glory of a Continent,
Made him of clay and star-dust—gave him feet
And wings. Like molten flame she poured her light,
Sent him swift sight to captain our stern need,
To cleanse with laughter our too heavy air,
To take away the scorn of common things,
To give the cup of water to the dog,
To lead unspeaking children by the hand.

Like writhing spawn, like serpents of the slime,
He shook the cowardices from our hearts
And startled us to seeing; sternly he taught
The measure of true manhood, unafraid
Largely to love and valiantly to hate—
This flinger-back of creeping littleness,
This scorner of the underbrush of thought.

This was thy son, America—this man
Wrought in a furnace of thy fashioning.
Unsparingly his blade of spirit cut
Into our shams and foul hypocrisies.
This was thy son, formed from the roots of earth,
And from the lifting tree-tops—this, thy son,
Fashioned of brawny stuff, of elements
Not of perfection, but warm humanness—
No haloed saint but every inch a man,
Mixed with the lightning, thunder, with the night and dawn—
Of great compassion, of unpitying scorn;
With unblind eyes, seeing new paths to break,
He followed far, a burning Galahad—
This man of vision with the childlike heart!

Earth is the poorer for his passing—earth
Richer for that he stayed with us awhile;
And some uncharted star-space is come bright
With pleasure of his presence.
Eagerly he went from us, as he had lived—
Swiftly and passionately as of old;
Impatient to search out new eagle trail,
Glimpsing the far horizons, how should he
Go else than swiftly into reddening dawn?

Here on the common way was all the stuff
Whereof he built his heaven; somewhere must be Lightness and cheer and sight of homely things—
Of pipe and dog and children at their play.
Surely his kindred greet him in the halls
Of the high-hearted at some festive board
Deep in Valhalla, while a shout rings out,
A pledge of fellowship—song by the fire—
"Skoal! skoal! skoal! Our Leader has arrived!
Our Champion strong, our fearless fighting Man!"

In fine and simple manliness he grasps
Hands with heroic hands, he who had need—
"Need of the sky and business with the grass"—
And fine brave business with his fellow-men.
And with quick hands they welcome him—the hosts
Of those gone forth in battle for the Right—
In some new France to lead his Volunteers,
In some new sky to find his Flying Boy!

MARY SIEGRIST.

SO long as I have any influence left I shall protest against arbitration between this and any other country which will not keep its agreements. Arbitration is all well enough under favorable conditions, but not otherwise. It isn't right to arbitrate with a country when you know that that country will not keep an agreement if it comes to a pinch.

If you think that the people of the United States want universal peace arbitration I suggest that you go to California and investigate conditions. I have no use for liars, national, international, or those found in private life.

—From a speech in Arlington Cemetery, May 31, 1911.

I AM in this fight for certain principles, and the first and most important of these goes back to Sinai, and is embodied in the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt not steal a nomination." Thou shalt neither steal in politics nor in business. Thou shalt not steal from the people the birthright of the people to rule themselves.

I hold, in the language of the Kentucky Court of Appeals, that "stealing is stealing." No people is wholly civilized where a distinction is drawn between stealing an office and stealing a purse. No truly honest man should be satisfied with an office to which his title is not as valid as that of the homestead which shelters his family.

—From a speech in Chicago, June 22, 1912.

For Protection of Labor

IN the last twenty years an increasing percentage of our people have come to depend on industry for their livelihood, so that today the wage workers in industry rank in importance side by side with the tiller of the soil. As a people we cannot afford to let any group of citizens, any individual citizen, live or labor under conditions which are injurious to the common welfare. Industry, therefore, must submit to such public regulation as will make it a means of life and health, not of death or inefficiency. We must protect the crushable elements at the base of our present industrial structure.

—From a speech in Chicago, Aug. 6, 1912.

DURING the last half of the nineteenth century the leaders of reaction in the United States, political and financial alike, gradually grew to recognize in the judiciary their most powerful potential ally. There was very little actual corruption on the bench; on the contrary, our Judges have been, on the whole, both able and upright public servants, standing on a level probably higher than that of any other civil servants of the Government. But their whole training and the aloofness of their position on the bench prevent their having, as a rule, any real knowledge of, or understanding sympathy with, the lives and needs of the ordinary hard-working toiler.

—From a speech at Santiago, Chile, Nov. 22, 1913.

IT seems to me that we should realize with the keenest gratitude how much we owe to the fact that by steady application of the Monroe Doctrine this country has succeeded in preventing the colonization of this continent by the great military Old World powers. If it had not been for the existence of that doctrine, and its support by this Government under Presidents of all shades of political belief, the great military nations of the Old World would unquestionably long ere this have possessed masses of territory in the western hemisphere. In such case nothing under heaven could have prevented our being involved in European struggles like the present. We would also in such case be under the crushing burden of immense armaments in time of peace, a burden the bearing of which has grown more enormous year by year in Europe. Well meaning and amiable but shortsighted persons have from time to time protested against the Monroe Doctrine and said it was outworn. I wish these good persons would seriously consider the present contest and realize that if it had not been for the Monroe Doctrine in the past, and if the Monroe Doctrine were at this moment abandoned, the United States would, in all probability, have been drawn into the present dreadful struggle.

—From a speech at Hartford, Conn., Aug. 15, 1914.

IT is the country's duty to put itself into such shape that it will be able to defend its rights if they are invaded. I myself have seen the plans of at least two empires now involved in the war to capture our great cities and hold them for ransom because our standing army is too weak to protect them. I have seen plans prepared deliberately to take both San Francisco and New York and hold them for ransom that would cripple our country and give funds to the enemy for carrying on the war.

—From a speech at Trenton, N. J., Oct. 30, 1914.

Criticism of Wilson

TO the extent of my power I supported Mr. Wilson either by silence or by open championship as long as there was the remotest chance that in standing by him as President I was also standing by the honor and interest of the country. I construed every doubt, both as regards Mexico, as regards Germany, and as regards Belgium, in his favor, often against my innermost convictions, as long as it was possible to do so.

I insisted to myself and to others that President Wilson doubtless had some definite plan; that he doubtless had sources of information unknown to the outside public which rendered proper his course, both as regards Mexico and Belgium, until I became convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that such was not the case; that he had no secret facts at his command, other than corroborative of the facts known to me and to all other intelligent men, and that he had no plan whatever save by adroit elocution to cover inaction and refusal to perform national and international duty.

—From an article in "The Metropolitan Magazine," May, 1915.

WE have been culpably, well nigh criminally, remiss as a nation in not preparing ourselves during this year; and if, with the lessons taught the world by the dreadful tragedies of the last twelve months, we continue with soft complaisance to stand helpless and naked before the world, we shall excite only contempt and derision, if, and when, disaster ultimately overwhelms us.

—From a speech in San Francisco July 21, 1915.

PROFESSIONAL pacifists, the peace-at-any-price, non-resistance, universal arbitration people are seeking to Chinafy this country.

—From a speech in San Francisco, July 21, 1915.

DURING the last year this nation has negotiated some thirty all-inclusive peace treaties by which it is agreed that if any issue arises, no matter of what kind, between itself and any other nation, it would take no final steps about it until a commission of investigation had discussed the matter for a year. This was an explicit promise in each case that if American women were raped and American men were murdered, as had actually occurred in Mexico, or American men, women, and children drowned on the high seas, as in the case of the Gulflight and Lusitania, or if a foreign power secured and fortified Magdalena Bay or the Island of St. Thomas, we would appoint a commission and listen to a year's conversation before taking action.

—From a speech in San Francisco, July 21, 1915.

Before We Entered the War

UNFORTUNATELY it is evident that many of our public men are afraid of Germany, afraid of the professional German-American vote, and are willing to sacrifice the honor of this country to their fears. There is practically no French-American or English-American vote; and these politicians therefore feel that they can act against England and France with safety—and their motto is safety first.

—From a speech in Brooklyn, Jan. 30, 1916.

NOW you can have universal training or you can have voluntary training, but when you use the word "voluntary" after "universal" you are using

NEWS OF THE STAGE IN THESE AND OTHER PARTS

MRS. FISKE COMES BACK

By JOHN CORBIN.

ONCE more Mrs. Fiske has come back, and with such a rush that in effect she has surpassed herself. It is strange how she does it—and stranger still how she sometimes backslides so completely. If the thing is to be explained at all, it must be on the ground of sheer genius.

A horrid little word, is it not? In the past century the favorite indoor sport of critical bigwigs was to inform an eager world as to the precise difference between fancy and imagination, talent and genius. And when the eager world was finally informed it suddenly ceased to be eager, or to have any use, in fact, for the high-sounding epithets. Perhaps it was because they seemed to fog the issue, beg the question. Nothing can be made explicit, certainly, by invoking concepts which are imponderable, indefinable. Yet genius does exist, and if it can never be an explanation of the given result it may still be the only and sufficient description of it.

Some critics dispose of Mrs. Fiske as a New England schoolmarm who has missed her vocation. With these I confess an imperfect sympathy. Perhaps I know too much about New England schoolmarms. But there is no denying the limitations of her temperament. A painstaking census of the actors of her generation reveals no one so pronounced and unchangeable, with the exception of Ada Rehan, Maude Adams, George Arliss, Richard Mansfield, Ellen Terry, Henry Irving, Sarah Bernhardt, and Eleanora Duse. In her technical limitations she is even more nearly unique. The only actor as ungainly in his walk and as pitifully mannered in his speech is Henry Irving. Being thus narrowly cabined, cribbed, confined, how is it possible that she should thrill us or chill us, make our hair rise with awe, or rock us with laughter? I don't know, and I never knew any one who did. The only thing certain is that it is by means unknown to the schoolmarm.

Even more mysterious is the fact that she has created so great a variety of acutely individualized characters. There was Tess the peasant woman—slow, full blooded, passionate, divinely good and divinely sorrowing. Has any one but Mrs. Fiske ever shown us a Madonna committing murder with a bread knife, and convinced us at every moment that she was all the more a Madonna? There was Hedda, the highly intelligent young woman of the world—subtle, malignant, diabolic; brittle as glass to the impact of all vital things, cold as ice to the spirit and yet, like ice, suffusing whatever touched it with a hectic, unnatural glow. Has any one else reminded us so vividly that there are arctic regions in hell, as well as torrid? And then her comedy side! From the artist who created Hedda and Tess, the last thing one would expect is crackling, coruscating wit, and sunbursts of golden humor. Yet there is Becky Sharp, who has ousted Thackeray's visual image of his heroine from the minds of a generation of playgoers. And now we have Mis' Nelly of N'Orleans, in whom the ripe blood of comedy flows as abundantly as flowed the red rivers of passion in Tess. Has Bernhardt or Duse created a wider variety of portraits, more intensely felt and uttered? Greater artists they undoubtedly were; but in this matter of range, (which dunderheads make the be-all and end-all of the art histrionic,) it is they who are cabined, cribbed, confined.

Their confinement, to be sure, is within the region of the masterpieces of the drama, or at worst in the region of the Sardous and the D'Annunzios who essay the grand manner. And here, if you will, lies the limitation of Mrs. Fiske. Beauty is a thing unknown to her, undreamed of; and so is style, with the possible exception of the acutely modern. As far as imagination consists in framing and uttering ideal concepts, she is utterly without it. Her temperament is actual, almost literal. Technique she has; but it is a technique devoid of rhythm, or any sort of consistent control. When Henry E. Dixey imitates Irving, or Cecilia Loftus imitates Ada Rehan, the fun consists in the fact that the very spirit of the artist derided seems to possess them—so largely was it a thing of method and ritual. But when Emily Stevens imitates her aunt, as she unfailingly does, there isn't any fun at all; for the genius of Mrs. Fiske seems to shrink and vanish. All we have is a few scattered tricks and mannerisms—nothing of the essential reality. Now without beauty, without imagination, without style, poetic art is not possible; and so Mrs. Fiske has lived her life on the boards outside the pale of all the rhythmic great ones. At one time she divulged an intention to play Lady Macbeth; but some good spirit seems to have dissuaded her, or it would doubtless be less easy to exculpate her from the charge of being a schoolmarm. Last season she essayed the heroine of Lavedan's "Service," a part easily within the range of any actress who is technically proficient in routine characters and emotions. Well, the less said about that performance the better!

It may even be doubted whether Mrs. Fiske is the "intellectual" actress we all once proclaimed her, in spite of her triumphant foray into Ibsen. I seem to remember certain pronouncements, echoed in "The Dramatic Mirror" of the day, to the effect that Ibsen is clinical, destructive, sordid, and that the mission of dramatic art is to uplift and inspire. That is not the patter of our intelligentsia. Certainly the Ibsen performances are the only points of contact which Mrs. Fiske has established with the truly great. After it she relapsed mainly into the inspired buffoonery of "Mrs. Bumpsted Leigh" and the empty satiric horseplay of "Mme. Sand." With the exception of "The New York Idea," she has produced no new play of note, American or European.

What is an intellectual actress, anyway? The one best bet used to be Duse. And then the great and beautiful Italian—at once the most real and the most spiritual artist of her generation—proclaimed as the trinity of dramatic art, Shakespeare, Sardou, D'Annunzio! After that literary judgment, all bets were off. In comparison, Mrs. Fiske's scruples against Ibsen take rank as massive intellectuation. Undoubtedly there are performers on the stage who are intellectual, but it seems equally certain that they are never actresses, and seldom actors.

Yet I say it again, and all men may now witness it: Mrs. Fiske has genius, and a measure of it so full that it places her forever among the great artists of her time. What it is, I do not know, or how it comes upon her. I only know that it is sudden, electric, irresistible: sometimes burning to an intense, white glare, at others corruscating prismatic colors, and again, though more rarely, suffusing everything in broad, rich, human tones, such as were used by the old masters.

Mrs. Fiske on the Wagon.

AS a play, "Mis' Nelly" is as far as "Mrs. Bumpsted Leigh" from being a classic; but at the very worst it is an excellent star vehicle which Laurence Eyre has provided. The difference is obvious. In producing a classic, the actress hitches her wagon to a star. Inspiration descends upon her from the firmament of great art. In producing a star vehicle, she climbs aboard the wagon. It may be an eight-cylinder racer scorching to triumph, but the exhilaration it produces is a sort of auto-intoxication. For Mrs. Fiske, however, Mis' Nelly is a triumph. It is probably not too much to say that the contemporary stage has known no woman character creation which is so abundantly human and so freshly, irresistibly, laughable.

It is, in effect, as Lawrence Reamer has pointed out, a dual rôle. Jilted in her youth by a hot-headed young Creole, Mis' Nelly has lived in Paris until she learns that her niece is in love with the son of her former fiancé. The ancient feud is renewed, and Mis' Nelly returns to fight it out. Her first shift is to play the fox, pretending to be an old woman with spectacles and ear trumpet, in order to learn more fully how matters stand. It is an expedient that has never failed on the stage since Ben Jonson's "Volpone." And as always, the pretended dotard is in reality the youngest and most vital character in the play. Mrs. Fiske's assumption of senility, and especially of the outcropping of youthful humor and extravagance, are an incessant source of delight. Then she throws off the mask, appearing in the gown she wore at Mardi Gras back in '36, and repeating the little dinner that was then served al fresco in the garden of her old house in St. Charles Street. The spirit of youthful romance is revived, with gay lanterns, quaint costumes, and moonlight. And the old story is repeated, with the difference that it is now the young woman who does the jilting.

It is all grist to Mis' Nelly's mill! Her wit, vivacity, contrasting with the gawky suffering and petulant tempers of her niece, take the young man's fancy on the rebound. Caught between Creole passion and Creole pique, he proposes to her—and is accepted! Mis' Nelly is thus the prospective daughter of the man who jilted her; and you may be sure she extracts from the situation its utmost humor—and revenge. It is, if you will, a bit farcical; yet young men have been known to become desperate over women of 48, and with the childlike temperament of the Creole, the utmost absurdity of conduct is not only possible, but probable. The most one demands is that Mis' Nelly shall not take the situation seriously. That she does least of all things. She bubbles over with delight in its humors, fairly explodes with the joy of her perfect revenge. Yet such is the breadth of Mrs. Fiske's sympathies—and the excellence, after all, of the vehicle Mr. Eyre has constructed—that even as she does so one somehow feels that she also thrills to the romance of it all, as in an Indian Summer of her lost youth. The end, of course, is what it should be. Both couples are reunited, both romances crowned.

Not the least delightful phase of Mrs. Fiske's performance is her treatment of another old lover who is now a priest. Here, too, her sense of fun has play; but mingled with it is a rare gentleness for the faithful friend and reverence for the man of God. It is all very subtly and quietly done, but it adds a mellower trait which is invaluable in toning and subduing a character which might have been garish in brilliance. Mis' Nelly, in short, seems destined to take rank with those other vehicle parts of modern fame, the "Music Master" and "Lightnin'."

SCORN not the amateur! "Critic, you have frowned mindless of its just honor." In the brummagem world of Broadway especially, where to be "professional" is of necessity to cater to the artistic perceptions of the million, the true "lover" of dramatic art is as rare a prize as the bluebird of happiness. To our amateur producers we owe much of what has been most precious in the past decade—to the Neighborhood Playhouse, to the Greenwich Village Theatre, to the Washington Square Players, and last but not least in love, to the Portmanteau Theatre. They have given us a series of plays which, though too small in calibre for the regular commercial consumption, are of the most vigorous imagination; acting which, though sometimes technically crude, has the priceless quality of good taste, intelligence, and a genuine inspiration. No product of the amateur theatre is more precious than the little plays of Dunsany, and no producer has done half the service, to them and to us, for which we are indebted to Stuart Walker. While we lament the obsolescence of the repertory stock company, even while we predicate the impossibility of its revival, let us not ignore the fact that he has given us, in however miniature a fashion, the nearest approach to a substitute.

And yet—and yet! Why the portmanteau? When Mr. Walker could only give his performance in clubs and private houses it may have been necessary to pack up his props in his old gripsack and smile as if he had a real stage. And again, it may not have been necessary. A few curtains would have perhaps served as well, or better, with draperies instead of a solid proscenium. Since Mr. Walker has been producing in a theatre his use of the miniature inner proscenium is unjustifiable on any grounds—in short, an amateurish affectation. And in the case of the priceless atmospheric masterpieces of Dunsany it is an affectation most pernicious and costly. Even in the miniature fantasy "The Golden Doom" stage room is essential. Surely the King's door should be spacious, impressive—not a mere hole in the wall. And surely when the children scribble their fateful doggerel upon it the sentries should not be cramped in at their very elbows. The action becomes quite incredible, even to those who most easily accept a theatric convention.

In the case of "The Gods of the Mountain" the cramping is wellnigh fatal. To create an atmosphere of awe and terror the imagination requires latitude and longitude. There must be regions of gloom and distant lurking shadows—aerial spaces out of which each of us can evoke his own bogies. And when the actual stone gods come clumping, it should be from some vague penumbra—into which, when they have wreaked their vengeance upon sacrilege, they as vaguely depart. Mr. Walker's gods perforce come in upon the apron and stand between the audience and the lighted space up stage in stark, inillusive outline. The only other production I have seen of the play was given by children of the Educational Dramatic League; but it employed the full resources of the stage and was far more thrilling, more convincing to the imagination.

Several observers have noted that the effect of "King Argimenes" was more powerful. It was; but the fact is scarcely to be attributed to any intrinsic superiority. It was an effect not of atmosphere and the imponderable forces of imagination, but of direct histrionic art. Even as Argimenes sat in triumph upon the throne of his defeated master, he started ravenously and gnashed his teeth at the prospect of a meal of dead dog—the instincts of the slave persisting, though he had regained the whole world. That is an effect essentially histrionic, and it is only for this reason that it survived the portmanteau stage, upon which the rarer, more imaginative, and dramatic illusion perished.

THE WEEK'S NEW OFFERINGS

ONCE more it is an active week in the playhouses, with four new productions scheduled for Broadway and several minor events of interest to the right and left thereof.

TOBY'S BOW—Tomorrow night at the Comedy Theatre.

John Taintor Foote, author of a number of novels and particularly well known as a writer of animal stories, contributes his first play to the stage in "Toby's Bow." It is, according to the prospectus, the tale of a successful novelist who goes into the South in an effort to rebuild himself, and of the adventures which there befall him.

Norman Trevor will be the novelist, and George Marion will be the Toby of the title—a colored servitor. Still others in the cast will be Doris Rankin, Merle Maddern, Charles A. Stevenson, Wright Kramer, Alice Augarde Butler, Christabel Hunter, Charles Esdale, and T. Tamamoto.

This is a play—a melodrama, to be precise—by Maravene Thompson, who has hitherto been known largely as a novelist. It is being presented by Lee Kugel, whose last offering in these parts was the well-remembered "Old Lady 31." Kathlene MacDonell, who was Robert Hilliard's leading woman in "Pride of Race," (and afterward played the leading rôle in a short-lived play called "Margery Daw,") will be seen in the leading part.

Others in the cast will include Charles Millward, Charles Dalton, Francis Byrne, Byron Beasley, Ben Johnson, Arthur Eldred, Walter Horton, Alfred Shirley, Cicely Barcham and Graham Lucas.

This is a farce by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, neither of whom has hitherto figured publicly as a playwright. If further advance information be desired, it may be added that it is a honeymoon farce. Ernest Truex and Edith Taliaferro will be the honeymooners, and those who will assist them in and out of their troubles will be William H. Sampson, Ida Darling, Martin L. Alsop, Elise Bartlett, Edward See, Francis Pierlot, Perce Benton, Thomas E. Jackson, Elmer Brown, Margaret Johnston, and J. D. Walsh.

Maeterlinck's "Pelléas and Mélisande," more familiar in these parts as an operatic libretto than in its original form, will be the new offering of the French players this week. It has, however, been performed here in English as a play, Mrs. Campbell having acted it for the first time in 1902. In M. Copeau's production Jean Sarment and Suzanne Bing will be seen in the leading rôles.

The offering of the following week at the Vieux Colombier will be the new Percy MacKaye play, "Washington." Jacques Copeau will play the title rôle.

MONTE CRISTO, JR.—Wednesday afternoon at the Winter Garden.

The new Winter Garden extravaganza, scheduled to begin its career with a matinée, is the work of the established Winter Garden writers, Harold Atteridge and Sigmund Romberg, with Jean Schwartz thrown in for good measure. It is entitled "Monte Cristo, Jr.," and presents a fantastic musical comedy treatment of the Dumas story.

Among those in the company will be Charles Purcell, Adelaide and Hughes, Ralph Herz, Audrey Maple, Sydney Jarvis, William and Gordon Dooley, Kitty and Fanny Watson, Sam Ash, Tom Lewis, Alexis Kosloff, and Flore Revalles.

AS YOU LIKE IT—Friday afternoon at the Plymouth Theatre.

This is the third production of the season by the Shakespeare Playhouse, and will be played, as was "Hamlet," on Friday afternoons and Saturday mornings until further notice. "Hamlet" will not be dropped, but will be played hereafter once a week—on Thursday afternoons.

Elsie Mackay will be the new Rosalind, and Leonard Willey will be the Orlando. The cast will also include Howard Kyle, as Jacques; Henry Herbert, as Touchstone; Margaret Moffat, as Audrey; Ernest Rowan, as Silvius; J. Harry Irvine, as Le Beau; Charles Webster, as Oliver; Mayo Thach, as Phoebe; Madeleine Marshall, as Celia; Allen Thomas, as the Duke; Joseph Whittemore, as William, and Frank McEntee, the director of the organization, as Adam.

Al Jolson, long accustomed to moving, will take "Sinbad" from the Winter Garden to the Forty-fourth Street Theatre tomorrow night. The piece is the ranking attraction of the season in point of longevity.

A program of Japanese Neh dances, which are in the nature of dance-dramas, will be given at the Greenwich Village Theatre on Friday afternoon by, and under the direction of, Catherine du Pont.

Men in uniform are invited to attend a performance of "The Unknown Purple" at the Lyric Theatre as tonight's particular treat. There will also be a free dress rehearsal at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre of a play about to be produced out of town.

WHO IS WILSON COLLISON?

WILSON COLLISON, who figures on the Eltinge programs as one of the authors of "Up in Mabel's Room," is a Columbus (Ohio) druggist, but for all that he is far from a stranger to the drama. He was an actor at 18, (he is now 28,) a member of a repertory company which toured the small towns of Michigan. In the dressing room of a theatre—or perhaps it should be the theatre—in Big Rapids, Mich., he finished his first play, a piece called "Desert Sands."

He has been a vaudeville actor—in a sketch of his own in the small-time houses of the South and West—a printer, an advertising writer, a stenographer, and a clerk, and is at the present time in the wholesale and retail drug business, but through it all he has shown that passionate devotion to authorship which is generally found in those who finally begin to see their plays reach the stage.

Collison wrote a variety of plays—he puts the number at forty—one of which was produced by Adele Blood at the Teck Theatre in Buffalo in the Summer of 1915, and presumably never again. Working nightly from 8 until 3, after the day's labor in more commercial fields, Collison also turned out two novels and numerous short stories. Many of the latter he sold; the former still languish.

Despite his authorship of forty plays, Collison was still a "new playwright" to the producer, and his farce was given to the more experienced Otto Harbach to rewrite. The title which it now bears is said to have been bestowed upon it by John Cumberland.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

WHEN note was made in these columns six weeks ago that all but three of New York's playhouses were occupied, it was with the thought that the height of prosperity had been reached. Rare as it is to find the Little Theatre, the Punch and Judy, and the Greenwich Village functioning simultaneously, that spectacle will be revealed to the populace during the coming week. Not only those, but every other legitimate theatre in the town, be it large or small, will be likewise in operation. And the golden goose hangs high.

The revised roster of the incoming Winter Garden show reveals the names of Adelaide Hughes, thereby leading directly to the deduction that the Cohan & Harris musical production, "A Royal Vagabond," will be without those particular dancers when finally it is produced in New York. "A Royal Vagabond," incidentally, is now in the course of its second ironing out on the road.

De Wolf Hopper—Hopper of the Hippodrome—will begin rehearsing the rôle of Ole Bill in "The Better 'Ole" within a week or so. It is unlikely, however, that the Hopper Bill ever will be seen in New York, for the first stop is Chicago, which ought to yield ample patronage to retain the piece half a season or more.

Kathlene MacDonell, who comes to town in "The Net" this week, adds one more to the list of players whose names are frequently—if not generally—misspelled. High up among the others are Macey Harlam, Donald Gallaher, and Ernest Glendinning.

William A. Brady's temperance play, "Never Too Late," found a week a long time in Chicago, and was sent to the commodious storehouse eight days ago. There it will remain, unless another attempt is made to launch it after the 1st of July.

Winthrop Ames, according to the gossip, plans to revive "The Blue Bird" at the Century presently, the while "Betrothal" merrily continues. The earlier piece, it is understood, will be played on three afternoons weekly.

"Dark Rosaleen," an Irish race horse comedy, by Whitford Kane, the actor, and W. D. Hepenstall, has been put through its paces in Buffalo during the last week by David Belasco. The leading rôle was played by Eileen Huban, who, with Kane, was originally a member of the Irish Players. The play is not among this season's possibilities, but will probably come to town in September.

Although the Shuberts make tentative announcement of a pair of new plays for next week, a hurried survey of the theatre situation, fails to reveal a pair of prospective homes. The works on the horizon are "A Sleepless Night" and "Scandal," but the chances are that they will continue to linger in the offing for another few weeks.

DAVENPORT AND RANKIN.

HARRY DAVENPORT and Phyllis Rankin, the doctor and the housekeeper, respectively, of "Three Wise Fools," met and married in the original production of "The Belle of New York." Mr. Davenport is of the theatrical Davenports. His father, E. L. Davenport, was the noted tragedian, and his sister, Fanny, enjoyed a worldwide reputation in rôles calling for Bernhardt pyrotechnics. As for himself, his début was made in the boy's part in his father's production of "Damon and Pythias," when he was 5 years old. He was cast for children's parts until he was 13, and wound up his line of youthful rôles by playing the Admiral in the first juvenile cast of "Pinafore," in Philadelphia. After which he was sent to school.

Returning to the stage, he appeared with Frank Mayo for a few seasons in Shakespeare and Schiller, and was then with the original productions of "The Streets of New York" and "La Tosca," his sister's starring vehicle. Realizing that he needed some hard training, he then went to the Alcazar Theatre in San Francisco, where he remained in stock for four years. When he came East again he played in Joseph Grismer's "The New South," in "The Voyage of Suzette," with Sadie Martinot, and in "The Belle of New York."

Miss Rankin, too, enjoyed the advantages of a theatrical family and an education in the old school drama. Her father was McKee Rankin, who gave her her early training. When she left his companies she appeared under the Frohman management, principally with Rose Coghlan and Mrs. John Drew in old comedies.

At her marriage Miss Rankin left the stage, and returned to it in August in a small rôle in "Lightnin'," moving over to "Three Wise Fools," as did her husband, when that opus was ready for production.

IN THE LONDON THEATRES

IN view of the announced production here of the Masterlinck war tragedy, "The Burgomaster of Stilemonde," (to be played here as "A Burgomaster of Belgium,") the recent presentation of the play in London is of more than the usual interest. The London Times, following a charity matinée of the play at La Scala on Jan. 10, commented as follows:

"A familiar figure in the Masterlinckian theatre is the benignant Sage. His function is to moralize upon life and death and other such great matters, to expound with new variations the old thesis that to understand is to forgive, and, generally, to impart to the play the serenity and mansuetude of Masterlinck's quasi-philosophical essays. He is, as a rule, a subordinate personage, an Old King, perhaps, or a Chamberlain. You may consider him (if it be not a contradiction in terms) a wise Polonius. This figure reappears in 'The Burgomaster of Stilemonde,' but, perhaps to our surprise, as the protagonist of the play. It is about his life and death that he moralizes now, and the question is, indeed, a very practical one, for he is going to be shot. Some one, at any rate, must be shot, decrees the commander of the German forces in Stilemonde, in reparation for the murder of one of his officers, and in default of anybody else—the commander doesn't care whom—it must be the burgomaster. Suspicion falls upon the gardener, and, though innocent, he is quite willing to be shot, being also a benignant sage in his way, and firm on the point that his life is less valuable than the burgomaster's. But the burgomaster can be firm, too; it is not a question of comparative life-values, but of his own honor. He would rather die himself than send another innocent man to death, in his stead. There ensues some characteristically mild Masterlinckian ratiocinations, punctuated by more emphatic notes from a German Lieutenant, the burgomaster's son-in-law, but the burgomaster sticks to his point. It is a gentle exercise in the casuistry of self-sacrifice.

"And now there arises a second question. If the burgomaster is to be shot, shall he be shot alone? His unfortunate son-in-law has to command the firing party, and this the daughter cannot allow. Rather than that, let the son-in-law refuse to obey orders, and so be shot alongside the burgomaster, the daughter to make a third victim. Agreed, on the part of the young people; but the burgomaster is again inflexible and again abounds in argument—in fact, it is here that the 'wise Polonius' emerges, and becomes almost garrulous. He points out that young people must live their lives; that his daughter is enceinte; that his own death will suffice to secure the future safety of the town, and so forth. The drawback is that, in following the successive turns of the discussion, you almost forget the seriousness of the issue. You are offered logic-chopping when you want emotion, the tragic thrill. And that is one's resultant impression of 'The Burgomaster of Stilemonde'; it is a tragic theme treated without tragic force. Beauty it has, but its beauty is the 'sweet reasonableness' of the sage. And even the sage's reasonableness runs too complacently to amiable verbiage.

"Amiable is distinctly the word for the burgomaster—an entirely charming figure. He is an enthusiastic fruit grower, as is the excellent way with so many Belgians, an ordinary, quiet, home loving citizen who becomes—always quietly—a hero, never losing his homely simplicity, never posturing, and even in the hour of death manifestly enjoying a good placid talk. If such a character cannot make a protagonist of high tragedy (and, after all, high tragedy was probably never M. Masterlinck's aim,) it can be and, in Martin Harvey's sympathetic presentation, is a wholly delightful thing in itself."

The present schedule of attractions at the London playhouses is as follows, a parenthetical "m" indicating those which are of a musical nature:

Adelphi—"The Boy." (m)
Alhambra—"The Bing Boys on Broadway." (m)
Ambassador's—"Us." (m)
Apollo—"Soldier Boy!" (m)
Comedy—"Tails Up." (m)
Court—"Twelfth Night."
Criterion—"You Never Know, Y'Know."
Daly's—"The Maid of the Mountains." (m)
Drury Lane—"Babes in the Wood." (m)
Duke of York's—"The Man From Toronto."
Empire—"The Lilac Domino." (m)
Gaiety—"Going Up!" (m)
Garrick—"Purse Strings."
Globe—"Nurse Benson."
Haymarket—"Uncle Sam," ("Friendly Enemies.") (Opens Feb. 13.)
Hippodrome—"Box o' Tricks." (m)
His Majesty's—"Chu Chin Chow." (m)
Kingsway—"Oh, Joy!" ("Oh, Boy!") (m)
London Pavilion—"As You Were." (m)
Lyceum—"Cinderella." (m)
Lyric—Doris Keane in "Roxana" ("Nobody's Widow.")
New—"A Chinese Puzzle."
Oxford—"In the Night Watch."
Palace—Elsie Janis in "Hullo, America!" (m)
Playhouse—"The Naughty Wife."
Prince of Wales—"Fair and Warmer."
Prince's—"The Officers' Mess." (m)
Queen's—"The Luck of the Navy."
Royalty—"The Title."
St. James—Gertrude Elliott in "Eyes of Youth."
St. Martin's—"A Certain Liveliness."
Savoy—"Nothing But the Truth."
Scala—"The Purple Mask."
Shaftesbury—"Yes, Uncle." (m)
Strand—"Scandal."
Vaudeville—"Buzz, Buzz." (m)
Wyndham's—"The Law Divine."

Of the thirty-seven plays above listed it will be noted that eighteen are of the musical variety. Of the remaining nineteen, only two or three are serious plays, the others being mainly farces. Two of the total of thirty-seven are American products.

Several newcomers will be noted in the list. There is, for example, "In the Night Watch," by Michael Morton. It is a war thriller, or said to be. It is, according to The Times, "a French naval play, turned into English. An excellent play of its kind, with a story clearly told about the conflict of love and honor and patriotic duty, with a realistic battle scene and an exciting trial, and without 'a single spy.'" From which it may be gathered that the piece is a full evening's entertainment, and will presumably some day be brought across the Atlantic.

"Purse Strings," produced about a week ago, is a comedy, and if the reports are correct, it possesses no particular points which distinguish it from its fellows. Lyn Harding, whose talents are generally given to more serious things, has the leading rôle.

"A Certain Liveliness," produced a day or two ago at St. Martin's, is too recent to be described except in the most general terms. It is a comedy by Basil McDonald Hastings, and the leading rôle, that of the King of a mythical kingdom, is taken by Seymour Hicks.

There is a variety of interesting events impending. Barrie is writing another play for Gerald Du Maurier, for whom he wrote "Dear Brutus"; Pinero is at work on a manuscript which Irene Vanbrugh will produce; Robert Hichins's "A Voice from the Minarets," will presently be staged at the Globe by Marie Lohr; "Caesar's Wife," by W. Somerset Maugham, will eventually succeed Arnold Bennett's "The Title" at the Royalty; Major Robert Lorraine, out of the service, is projecting a revival of "Cyrano de Bergerac"; Horace Annesley Vachell has a new play called "The House of Peril," which is in training for production at Queen's; Oscar Asche's successor to "Chu Chin Chow" is entitled "Mecca," but is unlikely to be produced before next season, such is the popularity of "Chu"; "Peter Pan" has been having the most successful revival of its career at the New Theatre, despite the fact that performances began at 7 o'clock in the evening; Pinero's "In Chancery," set to music, will follow "The Boy" at the Adelphi; a musicalized version of Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire," with Maggie Teyte in the leading rôle, will be produced soon by Gilbert Miller; Sir Alfred Butt is preparing both "The Governor's Lady" and "The Gypsy Trail" for the London stage; James Bernard Fagan's production of "Twelfth Night" has passed its 150th performance at the Cort, a remarkable run for a Shakespearean play, and—and for many it is a large "and"—Elsie Janis will be home in April.

The difficult trick of resuming where it left off, following an interruption of six or eight weeks, has just been turned by "The Chinese Puzzle," which is once more the program at the New Theatre following the holiday run of "Peter Pan." Such a proceeding is almost an unheard-of thing in New York, where the interruption of the run of a play is, except in exceptional cases, sufficient to kill the interest. According to all reports, however, "A Chinese Puzzle" is going along as merrily as ever at the New.

MORE FRENCH OPERA.

TWO operas never before heard in New York, with more of the modern French repertoire, and two old Italian favorites are on the Chicago Opera Association's list for its third week, at the Lexington Theatre, beginning Monday night. All are "first times" except Leroux's "Le Chemineau," which challenged interest in the opening week, and will be sung tomorrow by the same cast, including Gall, Sharlow, Claessens, Maguenat, Baklanoff, Huberdeau, Dua, Nicolay, and others, led by Louis Hasselmans.

"Cleopatre," by Massenet, introduced to America several years ago in Chicago, will have its first New York hearing on Tuesday, with Garden in the title rôle, Maguenat as Marc Antony, Fontaine as Spakos, Fitziu as Octavie, Huberdeau as Emnius, Nicolay as Amnhes, Marie Pruzan as Charmion, Vallya Kerelli as Adamos, Defrere as Severus, and Pavley and Oukrainsky in the ballet, conducted by Charlier, who led the first American performance.

With Galli-Curci in "The Barber of Seville" on Wednesday, will be Fernando Carpi, formerly of the Metropolitan, as well as Stracciari, Arimondi, Trevisan, Claessens, Oliviero, and Campanini himself conducting.

Novelty by an Italian.

The Lexington's second novelty of the week, Catalani's "Loreley," will be staged on Thursday night, with Anna Fitziu, Florence Macbeth, Alessandro Dolci, Rimini, and Virgilio Lazzari, the cast that introduced the opera to Chicago recently, and Polacco as conductor. The incidental ballet will be a début for Sylvia Tell, an American dancer.

Massenet's "Le Jongleur de Nôtre Dame," a memorable novelty of a decade ago and one of the offerings of last year's Chicago Opera visit, will be revived Friday night with Mary Garden in the title part, which she created in America. Others are Boulliiez, Huberdeau, Nicolay, Dua, Defrere, conducted by Charlier. Following the opera will be dances by Pavley and Oukrainsky, and their ballet.

Galli-Curci will sing at the Saturday matinée in "La Traviata," when Guido Ciccolini makes his operatic début here in the tenor rôle and Stracciari sings Germont père.

A change of opera for the popular-price Saturday night will present "Faust," with Yvonne Gall, John O'Sullivan, and Journet.

Story of Massenet's "Cleopatre."

The story of the new "Cleopatre" is as French as its name, which is far from suggestions of Shakespeare.

Marc Antoine, as he is called, in camp at Tarus, is proclaimed victor of Egypt. The delegates of the conquered nations withdraw, all except Spakos, the favorite of Cleopatre. Preceded by Charmion, her slave-girl, Cleopatre enters. Antoine, overcome by her beauty, sends the others away. Envoys from Rome bring an order from the Senate for his return, but he refuses to leave Cleopatre.

In the second act preparations are making at home for the marriage of Octavie and Antoine. Emnius, just returned from Egypt with his chief, tells of Antoine's orgy there. Octavie, on her way to the nuptial chamber, enters with Antoine, who asks Emnius for news of Cleopatre. Learning that Spakos is again in favor, Antoine in mad jealousy tells of his love for Cleopatre, and Octavie falls fainting in the arms of her women.

The scene changes to an inn at Alexandria. Spakos appears with Cleopatre, disguised as a boy. The crowd attempts to mob them, when Spakos attacks Adamos, a dancer, who has attracted Cleopatre. She removes her head-dress and praises the crowd for having amused her. Charmion reports that Antoine is approaching, and Cleopatre prepares to meet him. Spakos, wild with jealousy, attacks her, but is led away by the crowd.

Scene in the Queen's Garden.

Act three shows Antoine and Cleopatre in the Queen's garden. She offers to kiss the man who will drink a poisoned draught in the goblet she holds. Antoine dashes the goblet to the ground, begs her to be less cruel, but she declares he is lacking in courage. Octavie comes unannounced to beg Antoine to return to Rome, and asks Cleopatre's aid. Antoine rushes out to battle, but returns in his chariot to bid the Queen farewell.

Cleopatre on a terrace awaits news of the battle, prepared to kill herself if Antoine falls. She has spread the report that she herself is already dead, and orders Spakos to summon Antoine to her. Charmion enters with a basket of flowers in which an asp is concealed. Cleopatre prefers such a death to falling into the hands of Octavius, Emperor of Rome.

Spakos again tells his love, and she stabs him to the heart. Antoine, who has heard the false rumor of Cleopatre's death, enters mortally wounded. As he dies, Cleopatre causes the asp to bite her and dies before the entrance of the victorious Octavius.

Jules Massenet (1842-1912) was the most prolific of all composers of modern French operas. His "Manon," "Werther," "Le Cid," "La Navarraise," have been heard at the Metropolitan, where "Cendrillon" and "Don Quichotte" were added by the Chicago company formerly, while the famous productions of "Thaïs," "Le Jongleur," "Herodiade," "Sapho" and "Griselidis" were given at the Manhattan by Oscar Hammerstein. "Cleopatre" is thus the twelfth of Massent's operas in New York.

Catalani and His "Loreley."

Alfredo Catalani, a composer new to this public, was born at Lucca, June 19, 1854, according to Grove, and studied with his father, the organist of a church in that city. At the age of 14 he wrote a mass which was sung at the cathedral. At 17 he went to the Paris Conservatoire, where he studied in Bazin's class. Returning to Italy he studied for two years at the Milan Conservatory, at the theatre of which his first essay at dramatic composition, an "Egloga" in one act, entitled, "La Falce," was produced in the Summer of 1875.

His grand four-act opera, "Elda," words by D'Ormeville, was brought out Jan. 31, 1880, at Turin; on March 17, 1883, a similar work, "Dejanire," in four acts, libretto by Zanardini, was given at the Scala at Milan. In 1885 a symphonic poem for orchestra, "Ero e Leandro," attained considerable success. "Edmea," a three-act opera, libretto by Ghislanzoni, was produced at the Scala, Feb. 27, 1886. His "Loreley" was produced at Turin in 1890, and "La Wally" in 1892. The composer died at Milan, August 7, 1893.

The story of the opera "Loreley" is trans-Alpine in setting. Walter, Lord of Oberwesel, betrothed to Anna of Rehberg, niece of the Margraf of Biberich, meets Loreley wandering along the river bank, and they fall in love. He confides the incident to his friend, Hermann, who is himself in love with Anna but urges Walter to be faithful. Loreley learns that he is betrothed, and promptly swoons. Hermann, lamenting that he has yielded Anna to another, appeals to the Rhine god to avenge Anna's wrongs.

Old Friends from the Rhine.

Loreley, still in Act 1, comes to the nymphs of the Rhine and the spirits of the air, who are singing in praise of the river god; lamenting her lost honor, she seeks to avenge the wrong done her. The spirits tell her that Alberich, King of the Rhine, can accomplish this by making her irresistible and thus capable of torturing the faithless one with new pangs of love. But she must swear fidelity to Alberich. This she does and flings herself into the river. She rises instantly, transformed, with golden hair and wearing the golden comb of the Loreley.

Walter and Anna, on their way to the church to be married, in the second act, are confronted by Loreley, who appears in a mystic light, and sings her songs of love to Walter. He casts Anna from him, and as he rushes to the arms of Loreley she jumps into the river, leaving Walter on the bank. As Anna falls lifeless Loreley appears on the rock.

Poor Anna is borne to rest in the third act, which Walter observes, and he falls fainting by the river. As he wakes he sees Loreley on her rock singing her song to him. But when she is about to embrace him threatening voices from the deep remind her of her oath to the river god. She tears herself from Walter and returns to her rock. He, in a frenzy, throws himself into the river as Loreley sings her love song once more.

METROPOLITAN OPERA.

Maria Barrientos, who since she sang with the Metropolitan Opera Company last season has made a tour through the West Indies, South America, and Spain, and back to New York by way of Cuba, a distance in miles almost equal to a voyage around the world, will rejoin Mr. Gatti's company this week and reappear on Friday evening as Gilda in the season's first "Rigoletto," with an international cast.

With the Spanish singer will be the young American lyric tenor, Hackett, as the Duke; De Luca, an Italian, as the Jester, and Rothier, a Frenchman, as Sparafucile. Others will be Perini, Egener, Mellish, Rossi, Bada, Reschiglian, and Moranzoni conducting.

Caruso Sings on Holiday.

Lincoln's Birthday will be marked by a special matinée of "Aida," with Caruso, Muzio, Claussen, Whitehill, and Mardones. Miss Smith will dance and Moranzoni will conduct.

Frieda Hempel closes her seventh season here in "Crispino e la Comare," followed by "Petroushka," tomorrow evening. The opera engages also Braslau, Scotti, Chalmers, De Segurola, with Papi conducting. The ballet will be danced by Galli, Bolm, Bonfiglio, and others, led by Monteux.

In "Faust" on Wednesday evening will be Farrar, Delaunois, Howard, Martinelli, Chalmers, Rothier, and Ananian. Gounod's classic ballet is included and Monteux will conduct.

Russian "Boris" Again.

A welcome recurrence is "Boris Godunoff" on Thursday evening, with Matzenauer and Didur, Delaunois, Mellish, Howard, and Mattfeld; also Althouse, Mardones, De Segurola, Bada, Audisio, Paltrinieri, Schlegel, Reschiglian, and Rossi. Papi will conduct.

Caruso sings two matinées this week, the second in "Lodoletta," followed by "Petroushka" next Saturday. With him in the opera will be Easton, Chalmers, Didur, and others, Moranzoni conducting, while the ballet will be repeated by tomorrow's cast, again led by Monteux.

Farrar in "Tosca" will be the Saturday evening opera at popular prices, with Lazaro and Scotti, and Moranzoni at the baton.

COL. W.A. BISHOP
V. C., D. S. O., M. C., D. F. C.
Author of "Winged Warfare"
THE WORLD'S GREATEST ACE
Official Record 72 Hun Machines

Will repeat his marvelous story of his thrilling air-fights—some of them 20,000 feet above the earth, at

Carnegie Hall, Fri. Eve., Feb. 14th, at 8:30

President Hawley of the Aero Club of America, introducing Col. Bishop at his first lecture in America, said: Ladies and Gentlemen:

"It gives me the greatest pleasure to introduce to you the Ace of Aces. A man who has brought down 72 German machines officially and 110 unofficially. A man who represents the highest type of AIR WARRIOR. A man who has received every decoration and distinction that it is possible for his country to bestow.

"THE AERO CLUB OF AMERICA is also proud to have awarded to Colonel Bishop its SPECIAL WAR MEDAL, for having brought down the greatest number of enemy machines destroyed by any of the allied airmen, and for bringing down 5 machines in thirty minutes, a record unparalleled in the annals of air fighting.

"On the morning he received orders to return to England, he went out for one last fling at the enemy, and before he returned he brought down 5 machines. On landing he said 'Good-bye' to his comrades, jumped into his motor car and caught the boat for England.

"He received the Military Cross, Distinguished Service Order, Victoria Cross and many other distinguished decorations for his many exploits, which surpass the wildest flights of the imagination.

"I take the greatest pleasure in introducing Colonel William A. Bishop of the Royal Flying Corps—the world's GREATEST ACE."

WHAT THE NEW YORK PRESS SAID OF THE LECTURE:

New York Herald.
Colonel W. A. Bishop, greatest of all aces, held the audience almost breathless with an account of duels in the air almost without end, but there was no mention of the exploit that won for him the Victoria Cross, the most coveted of all decorations in the imperial service. It was the opening of a lecture tour that will cover the entire country.

New York Sun.
Colonel Bishop entertained an enthusiastic audience with stories of desperate air battles.

New York Times.
A large audience heard Col. William A. Bishop, "Ace of Aces," the Canadian flyer, describe his experiences at the front. Colonel Bishop prefaced his talk with a tribute to the American pilots, whom he described as "unsurpassable," and told of the exploits of three Americans who had been members of his squadron.

New York World.
Colonel Bishop, the Canadian Ace, thrills Lexington Theatre audience with war tales. While his audience gasped in wonderment, the Colonel gave an account of his manoeuvres in the sun, told how he had played leap frog with the clouds and how every twist and turn of his machine meant one more German sent to his death.

"Col. Bishop, as most of us know, is the Ace of Aces, the uncrowned king of the air, the greatest flyer now alive in the world. He is the only man alive today who has earned the right to wear those three notable war decorations, the Victoria Cross, the Distinguished Service Order (twice won) and the Military Cross. Yet he is only twenty-four years old, and the most modest hero I ever had the pleasure of meeting."—Marguerite Mooers Marshall in The Evening World.

"Col. Bishop was attacked by four enemy planes. He downed three of them, scared off the fourth, and with incendiary bullets set fire to a German hangar, destroying the sixteen machines that it contained. I consider this the most wonderful individual accomplishment in the air ever performed by an aviator."—Major Charles Biddle of the American Air Service.

Victoria Cross
Legion of Honor
Two Distinguished Service Medals, with Bar
Military Cross
Distinguished Flying Cross

MELISANDE AND DEBUSSY

By James Gibbons Huneker

GEORGE MOORE has remarked that we never speak of Shakespeare or Hugo or Flaubert as the authors of any particular work. Simply to say their names suffices. I give the illustrations haphazard. Any great artist will do. From Claude Debussy we never ask of what he is the composer. "Pelléas and Mélisande" is his monument; rather, "Mélisande and Pelléas," as, in the case of "Isolde and Tristan," it is the woman who is protagonist. Is it because in creating characters of our mother's sex that the Eternal Masculine is projected across the feminine soul! Or, is woman the genuine, the aboriginal force, that we unwittingly obey, all the while calling her "little woman"? (condescendingly, of course.) Oh, what a joke of almost cosmical proportions it would be if the latter supposition be the truer one? But mere male mortals will always console themselves with the ineluctable fact that it is man who has endowed woman with a vital figure in the arts. He has created Ophelia and Gretchen, Beatrice and Francesca, the Milo Venus, the Winged Victory and Isolde, Lady Macbeth and Emma Bovary, Carmen and Mélisande. Honors, then, are even. Still the models existed in nature, the art of man it was that shaped them and breathed life into their clay. But Mélisande is the protagonist in the drama.

The music to Maurice Maeterlinck's strangely haunting play is so wedded to the moods and situations that as absolute music it is unthinkable. And these moods are usually "con sordino." Despite his musicianship, Debussy is obviously a "literary" composer; his brain had to be excited first by a dramatic situation, a beautiful bouquet of verse, an episode in fiction, or the contemplation of a picture.

Why demand if the initial impulse be the Monna Lisa or a quatrain by Verlaine? A composer who can interpret in tone the recondite moods of Baudelaire, Verlaine, Mallarmé, or the dramatic prose-poem of Maeterlinck, need not have been daunted by criticism; in sooth, it is the angle of critical incidence that must be shifted to adapt itself to the new optique. "Pelléas and Mélisande" is a study in musical decomposition; the phrase is decomposed, rhythms are dislocated, the harmonic structure melts and resolves itself into air. His themes are developed in opposition to the old laws of musical syntax. But what have laws in common with genius? Once assimilated, they may be broken as were broken the stone tablets by the mighty iconoclast, Moses. In the Debussyan idiom there seems to be no normal sequence. I say seems, for much water has gone under the bridge since his appearance, and compared with Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Ornstein, and Prokofieff he is a conservative; in another decade he may be called a reactionary. Life is brief and art is swift.

Our ears were not accustomed to his novel progressions and the forced marriage of harmonies. His tonalities are vague, but his values just. The introduction to the forest scene when Golaud discovers Mélisande is of an acid sweetness. Without anxious preoccupation Debussy has caught the exact Maeterlinckian note. As it is impossible to divorce music and text—Debussy seems to be Maeterlinck's musical other self—so it is needless to dwell upon the characteristic qualities of the score. It is like some antique and lovely tapestry that hypnotizes the gaze. It has the dream-drugged atmosphere of Edgar Allan Poe; the Poe of the dark tarn of Auber, of Ligeia, of Ellenora, of Berenice, and Helen, those frail apparitions from claustral solitudes and the Valley of the Many-Colored Grass, all as exotic as they are incorporeal. It is the complete envelopment of the poem by an atmospheric musical haze shot through with gleams of light never shown on land or sea.

We pardon the monotone of mood and music, the occasional cacophonies, the lack of exterior action, and the absence of climaxes; after so long waiting for a passionate outburst, when it does come it is overpowering in its intensity. In music the tact of omission has never been pushed so far. From the pianoforte partition little may be gleaned of its poetic fervor, its reticences, its delicate landscapes, psychologic subtleties. The pattern seldom obtrudes, as the web is spun "exceedingly fine." The orchestration reveals the silver-grays of Claude Monet and the fire-tipped iridescence of Monticelli. His musical palette proclaims Debussy a symbolist, one in the key of Verlaine, who loved nuance for its own sake and detested flauntingly brilliant hues. "Pas la couleur, rien que la nuance * * * et tout le reste est littérature," sung Paul of the asymmetrical jaws and supernal thirst.

Debussy is the most interesting of contemporary music-makers and the most subtle composer for the pianoforte since Chopin. His originality is not profoundly rooted in the history of his art, but his individuality is indisputable. He is a musician doubled by a poet. He is almost as Gallic as Chopin is Polish. Debussy shows race. His artistic pedigree stems from a grafting of old French composers upon ultra-modern methods. Wagner, Chopin, certain aspects of Liszt, and Moussorgsky. The visit he made to Russia in 1879 had important consequences. He had read the manuscript score of "Boris" at Rome, he absorbed Moussorgsky and the whole-tone scale, and this influence contributed to the richness and complexity of his style. Above all, he is a stylist. He has Wagner at his finger-tips, and, like Charpentier, he can't keep "Tristan" out of his music; it is his King Charles's head. Naturally such highly peptonized aural diet is not nourishing. Like the poetry and prose-poems of Stéphane Mallarmé, too much Debussy becomes trying to the nerves. Schumann has spoken of the singularly irritating effect of muted dissonances. "Pelléas" is nearly all muted. The mental and emotional concentration involved in the hearing of this music fatigues as does no other music; not even "Tristan."

The range of his ideas, like his dynamic range, is limited. Yet there is magic in his music, the magic of evocation. Not to describe, but to evoke, in effortless imagery, is the quintessence of his art. He is a painter of cameos and aquarelles. Never does he carve from the big block; an exquisite miniaturist, he does not handle a bold brush, nor boast the epical sweep of his predecessors; Berlioz for one. But he is more intimate, he is the poet of crepuscular moods. The sadness of tender, bruised souls is in his pages. Of virility there is little trace, it is music of the distaff and never sounds the masculine ring of crossed swords. Chopin, too, had his nocturnal moments, but he also wrote the A flat Polonaise, with its heroic defiance of a Poland crushed yet never conquered; with its motto: "Jeszcze Polska nie zginiela!"

Long before his death this French master was critically ranged. Lawrence Gilman, the most sympathetic of his commentators, is also the fairest. To his essays I go for delectation. It would be rash to say that Debussy had achieved his artistic apogee; he may have had surprises in store, but it is safe to conclude that "Pelléas and Mélisande" is his masterpiece, that the dewy freshness of "L'Après Midi d'un Faune" would never have been recaptured. The symphonic suite, "Printemps," the "Nocturnes," "La Mer," and "Images" at once reveal the strength and limitations of Debussy, who was not a builder of the "lofty rhyme," though he was a creator of complex rhythms; not a cerebral composer—like Vincent d'Indy, for example—but an emotional one; not a master of linear design, but a colorist; a poet, not an architect. His vision was authentic. He knew that the core of reality is poetry; he lived not at the circumference but the hub of things. He loathed the academic. He is the antipodes of Saint-Saëns. He gave us a novel nuance in music as did Maeterlinck in literature. (Think of "Interiors" with its motive—again Poe—the fear of fear!) Debussy is a composer of nuance, of half-hinted murmurings of "the silent thunder afloat in the leaves," of the rutilant faun with his metaphysical xenomania, of music overheard, and of mirrored dreams. Little wonder he sought to interpret in his weaving tones Baudelaire and Verlaine, Mallarmé and Maeterlinck. He was affiliated to that choir of sensitive and unhappy souls, of which Maurice Maeterlinck is the sole survivor. A poet himself, Claude Achille Debussy, even if he had never written a bar of music.

One Summer evening in 1908 I was introduced to him at a café on the Boulevard des Italiens. (Although all Frenchmen go to cafés for refreshment, mental and otherwise, they are not a nation of drunkards like the American nation, thus adjudged by the prohibition amendment). Debussy spoke a few polite words when I told him that I belonged to the critical chain-gang. He had written much musical criticism, chiefly memorable for its unsympathetic attitude toward Schumann and Wagner, not because of reasons chauvinistic, but doubtless the result of a natural reaction against the principal educative forces in his life. At least once in his career an artist curses his artistic progenitors. Wagner must have hated Weber because of his borrowings from him, and I am quite sure Chopin despised Hummel; internal evidence may be collated in the Pole's wide departure from the academic patterns of Hummel's passage-work. However, Debussy never went so far as his friend Jean Marnold, who in the "Mercure de France" concludes a comparative of study of "Pelleas" and "Tristan" in these words: "Le pathos de Tristan vient trop' tard; si tard, qu'il semble aujourd'hui, à sa place adéquate en notre Opéra toulousain." Yet if "Tristan" came so late, how is it that there is so much of its music in "Pelleas"? a fact that Philip Hale denies. There's the score. Tolle, lege! Who steals my idea steals trash; 'tis something, nothing; 'twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands; but he that filches from me my style robs me of that which not enriches him and makes me poor indeed! (This is reorchestrated to suit the simile). "Tristan" always seems in the wings when "Pelleas" is played, awaiting his cue to enter. It never fails to be given by Debussy.

Later I asked Maurice Maeterlinck his opinion of Debussy's music to "Pélleas and Mélisande." It was an imprudent question, for Lucienne Bréval had captured the rôle of Mélisande, not his wife, Georgette Leblanc. Bréval we remember when she sang in "Salammbô" and "Le Cid," among others, during the Grau régime at the Metropolitan Opera House. She was an accomplished routinière with an acidulous and strident soprano. When she sang "Pleurez-mes yeux" the wits transposed it to "Pleurez-nos oreilles." Maeterlinck is a polite man, and his answer was guarded, nevertheless his dislike of the music pierced his phrases. To him it was evident that his play needed no tonal embellishment, that it was more poetic, more dramatic, without the Debussy frame. He is quite right. And yet the spiritual collaboration of poet and musician is irresistible. And in the garden of the gods there is only one Mélisande. Some little dramas, like little books, have their destiny. The composer of "Pélleas and Mélisande" suffered from the nostalgia of the ideal, suffered from homesickness for his patrie psychique, the land of fantasy and evanescent visions. The world will not willingly forget him.

a weasel word which sucks the meaning out.

These are weasel words.

—From a speech in St. Louis, May 31, 1916.

I BELIEVE in democratic training, where the multi-millionaire and the son of the bricklayer will be in the same dog tent, and than have the best one of the bunch, whether the multi-millionaire's son or the bricklayer's son, made the officer.

—From a speech in Oyster Bay, July 4, 1916.

INSTEAD of speaking softly and carrying a big stick, President Wilson spoke bombastically and carried a dishrag.

—From a speech at Louisville, Oct. 19, 1916.

PRESIDENT WILSON has seen the Mexicans during these three and a half years become socially, politically, and morally bankrupt. He has not helped Mexico. He has ruined Mexico. The jungle is creeping over the great plantations. The cattle on the ranches have been wantonly and wastefully slaughtered. The thoroughbred stock farms which were the work of decades have been destroyed. Irrigation plants are out of service, railroad terminals have been burnt, rolling stock and locomotives broken up and damaged beyond repair. Mines that furnished employment to scores of thousands are standing idle. The National Treasury has been emptied. A paper currency, debased and worthless, has been substituted for the nation's money. All the means of an orderly, economic life have been destroyed. An epidemic of typhus rages that twice has menaced the health of our border cities. The country no longer produces sufficient foodstuffs. Actual starvation is upon the people. Sixty thousand white men, who were one of the great civilizing and developing forces of Mexico, are in exile.

—From a speech at Phoenix, Ariz., Oct. 22, 1916.

YOU say that hereafter nobody shall be neutral as respects the disturbance of the world's peace for an object which the world's opinion cannot sanction. What do you mean by this, Mr. Wilson? Why do you delay action to the future when you had The Hague Convention to warrant action in the present when Belgium's neutrality was invaded, her cities despoiled, her men and women slaughtered? * * * If you mean what you say as to the future, then you must mean precisely and exactly that this is your duty in the present. Do it now, Mr. President. It is sheer hypocrisy to chatter ten days before election as to what ought to be done in the future when throughout your whole term of office you have failed in the present to do what you now say is your duty.

—From a speech in Brooklyn, Oct. 29, 1916.

I CRITICISE him [Wilson] now because he has adroitly and cleverly and with sinister ability appealed to all that is weakest and most unworthy in the American character; and also because he has adroitly and cleverly and with sinister ability sought to mislead many men and women who are neither weak nor unworthy, but who have been misled by a shadow dance of words. He has made our statesmanship a thing of empty elocution. He has covered his fear of standing for the right behind a veil of rhetorical phrases. He has wrapped the true heart of the nation in a spangled shroud of rhetoric. He has kept the eyes of the people dazzled so that they know not what is real and what is false, so that they turn bewildered, unable to discern the difference between the glitter that veneers evil and the stark realities of courage and honesty, of truth and strength. In the face of the world he has covered this nation's face with shame as with a garment.

—From a speech at Cooper Union, Nov. 2, 1916.

I CARE little for the cubist school in patriotism. The effort to be original or being fantastic is always cheap. Second-rate work is always second-rate, even if it is done badly.

—From a speech on "Nationalism in Literature and Art," Nov. 15, 1916.

After We Entered the War

THE war has clearly raised two problems, the problem of the present, which is to help our allies to win this war by endeavoring in every way now to offset the effect of our utter failure to prepare in advance; and the permanent problem, the problem of defense against a future—perhaps a distant, perhaps an immediately impending future—attack upon us when we have no allies; the problem of preparing our strength as a permanent policy so that never again shall we be caught as shamefully unprepared as now, so that never again shall we be forced as at present to owe our safety purely to the valor of our allies and not to our own courage and strength.

—From a speech at county fair at Chatham, N. Y., Sept. 5, 1917.

MUCH has been said about our being against the German Government but not against the German people. The attitude of the German-American press and the German Alliance in this country in their hearty support of the German Government and the practically unanimous support of that Government heretofore by the Germans at home shows that at present the Germans are back of the German Government. They have enthusiastically suported its policy of brutal disregard of the rights of others. Until they reverse themselves, until they cast off the yoke of militaristic autocracy, they identify themselves with it and force us to be against them.

It is for the German people themselves to differentiate themselves from their Government. Until they do this they force us to be against the German people as a necessary incident of being against the German Government.

INTO A FAR COUNTRY

AMERICA is not to be made a polyglot boarding house for money hunters of twenty different nationalities who have changed their former country for this country only as farmyard beasts change one feeding trough for another. America is a nation. No man has any right to come here and no man should be permitted to stay here unless he becomes an American and nothing else. Be loyal to the principles established by Washington and his fellows in 1776 and perpetuated by Lincoln and his fellows in 1861 and 1865. We must have in this country only one flag, and that flag the American flag; only one language, the English language, the language of the Declaration of Independence, Washington's Farewell Address, Lincoln's Gettysburg speech and the second inaugural; and but one loyalty, that to the United States.

—From a speech to munition workers at Bridgeport, Conn., Nov. 3, 1917.

WE must accept no peace except the peace of overwhelming victory. To accept an inconclusive peace would mean that the whole war would have to be fought over again by ourselves or our children. To accept an inconclusive peace would really mean to work for a German victory. Those who now demand such a peace are not only the enemies of America, but of democracy throughout the world, and stand on the level of the Bolsheviki, who have betrayed both Russia and her allies to the militaristic and capitalistic autocracy of the Hohenzollerns.

—From a speech before Ohio Society of New York, Jan. 12, 1918.

BUT I believe that the great majority of my fellow-countrymen, when they finally take the trouble to think on the problem at all, will refuse to consent to or acquiesce in the Chinafication of this country. I believe that they will refuse to follow those who would make right helpless before might, who would put a pigtail on Uncle Sam, and turn the Goddess of Liberty into a pacifist female huckster clutching a bag of dollars, which she has not the courage to guard against aggression.

—From a speech at Chicago, April 2[illegible], 1918.

YOU stand up when "The Star-Spangled Banner" is sung, not because of men who previously sang it, but because of the men who stood the bombardment through the night—for the man who stood up to the killing and did the killing when the need came. That is why you are proud to be Americans now. Talking amounts to less than nothing, save just to the degree in which it is turned into action, and in this country of ours the man who is not only ready to fight for it, but to fit himself to fight for it, the man who has not raised himself to be a soldier, and the woman who has not raised her boy to be a soldier for the right—neither one of them is entitled to citizenship in the Republic. Universal suffrage, to justify itself, must be based on universal service. It is only you and your kind who have the absolutely clear title to the management of this Republic.

—From a speech to soldiers at Camp Upton, Nov. 18, 1917.

I ASK that we in this generation prove ourselves the spiritual heirs both of the men who wore the blue and of the men who wore the gray. But I make no appeal to the memory of the Copperhead pacifists who put peace above duty, who put love of ease and love of money-getting before devotion to country, and whose convictions were too weak to stir to action their tepid souls.

—From a speech in Kansas City, May 30, 1918.

Fifty-Fifty Americanism

AS regards Americanism, we must insist that there be in this country but one nationality, the American nationality. There must be no perpetuation in this country of separate national groups, with their separate languages and special loyalties to alien overseas flags. There can be no fifty-fifty Americanism in this country. There is room here for only 100 per cent. Americanism, only for those who are Americans and nothing else. We must have loyalty to only one flag, the American flag; and it is disloyal to the American flag to try to be loyal to any other, whether that other is a foreign flag or the black and red flag, which symbolize either anarchy or else treacherous hostility to a war for which the nation stands.

—From a speech at Republican Convention at Saratoga, July 19, 1918.

TWO prime purposes of the American people at this time having precedence of all others are: First, to insist upon the absolute and thoroughgoing Americanization of our entire citizenship; and, second, to win the war; to win it as speedily as possible, and end it by the peace of overwhelming victory, a peace which shall guarantee to us, and to our allies, and to all the well-behaved nations of the civilized world, lasting relief from the threat and horror of German world dominion.

—From a speech before Republican Convention at Saratoga, N. Y., July 19, 1918.

PROFESSIONAL TOASTMASTERS

England has an institution unknown in America—the professional toastmaster, whose duty it is at all large public dinners and luncheons formally to announce the toasts, as well as to call the guests to order. In fact, he performs the functions of a herald.

The Lord Mayor of London has his own toastmaster as well as his individual liveried servitor who attends and serves him when he dines, both at the Mansion House and elsewhere. He stands behind the Lord Mayor's chair, clad in suitable raiment; a dignified, handsome old man, clean-shaven and gray haired.

The present Lord Mayor, Sir Charles Hanson, whose term of office expires in November, looks the part. He is jovial and urbane, of a very pleasant visage withal. Clad in his medieval robes of office, wearing his chains and star, he is a commanding figure, recalling the best traditions of this place.

An American, of course, thinks of Dick Whittington when he imagines a picture of the Lord Mayor of London, and indeed the present incumbent very pleasantly gratifies this imagination by his appearance and speech. Apart from the picturesque aspect which is in keeping with the office, the present Lord Mayor is an exceedingly efficient executive, and has made a splendid record.

The other evening I was present at a dinner attended by the Lord Mayor, happening to be the only American guest. He did not wear his robes, but of course he carried the chains about his neck suspending the large, ancient, jeweled badge of office, and wore a glittering star on his left breast. Behind his chair stood his dignified liveried servant, silently attentive to his needs.

When he arose to speak he made a pleasant picture, to which his genial remarks added piquant zest. In concluding them he raised his glass and said: "Here's to our next merry meeting." "Merry meeting" was just what the Lord Mayor of London ought to have said. It recalled fairy-story books, and was most gratifying.

There are probably many professional toastmasters in London, but the one I happened to hear frequently is a solemn-faced individual, clad in black, with weary eyes and a heavy, drooping black mustache. He is perfectly impassive, lacking the faintest sense of humor, he takes himself and his office most seriously, and is never seen to smile. He has a wonderfully penetrating, sonorous, massive voice, which he uses to magnificent effect.

Preceding the dinner or luncheon, he stands with sepulchral dignity at the entrance to the reception room, announcing the guests as they arrive. It is "the Voice of London" heralding the advent of the individual who approaches. "Lord Loveus!" The Right Honorable William Brown!" "The Earl of Pawtucket!" "Colonel Jones!" "Admiral Smith!" "Sir Thomas Robinson!" "Mr. Nobody!"

After the menu has been disposed of, he, meanwhile, standing back of the Chairman, mallet in hand, raps smartly on the table, and says in a commanding voice something like this: "Your excellency, my lords and gentlemen, pray silence for the Chairman, who desires to offer a toast."

The toast being proposed, he again raps. "Mr. Chairman, your excellency, my lords and gentlemen, the toast is the King." Thereupon the toast is drunk standing, after which he says: "Mr. Chairman, your excellency, my lords and gentlemen, you may now smoke."

After the Chairman has spoken, calling upon some one present to respond, the toastmaster pounds with his mallet on the table and says: "Mr. Chairman, your excellency, my lords and gentlemen, the toast is"—whatever it may happen to be, and after it is drunk, to the invariable preliminary he adds "Pray silence for Sir Thomas Brown," enumerating his office and titles in minute detail.—[illegible]

TAKING MOVIES SERIOUSLY

II.

THE final assertion of the preceding chapter was that the case for the motion picture could be based, in the beginning, upon the promises and performances of the screen apart from the photoplay. To this assertion is now added, as the first claim made for the screen, the statement that the motion picture is the greatest educator of the willfully uneducated in the world. The willfully uneducated are those who not only will not walk around the corner to learn anything but will run around any number of corners to save themselves from having learning thrust upon them. They are legion. They are men and women one meets here, there, and everywhere—except where they expect to find anything of educational value.

One of the characteristics of the age, perhaps of other ages, seems to be that millions of persons who would resent being called uncultured are positively averse to doing anything that might help to make them cultured. Many a man will lie passively while a barber pinches and punches his face in an effort to improve his physiognomy, or he will waste needed dollars on hair restorers in order to improve the outside of his head, but ask him to do something to improve his mind and, if you happen to be a candidate in any kind of a contest, you obtain a hearty vote for your opponent. Many a woman will spend hours at manual labor before her mirror in an effort to improve her coiffure, she will stand until muscles and bones protest while a high-priced dressmaker strives to improve her style, or she will starve herself nearly to death and roll around the floor till she is black and blue in the hope of improving her figure, but show her how she may improve her mind and you will get a piece of it—in its most unimproved form.

Millions of men, women, and children who have this distaste for mental improvement go to "the movies." It has become a habit with them. The screen means entertainment to them, entertainment of the kind they do not fear. It is guaranteed, so they think, not to improve their minds, not to threaten them with instruction in anything worth learning. By the emphasis of advertising and favored position in programs, photoplays that deal in popular fictions and unreal simplifications of life's complexes have come to connote "the movies" to them, and they go to the motion picture theatres attracted by the featured trash—

"Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins,
Families by tens and dozens,
Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives"— to see Miss Slushy Mushy in "From Pigsty to Palace; or, Virtue's Reward," and Reckless Reginald's anonymous dummy in "The Daredevil's Dance of Death." They are caught by such "catchlines" and "teasers" as "What Would You Do if the Man You Loved Married Your Sister?" or "The Vampire Almost Got Him, but He Broke Loose Just in Time," or "If a Husband Is Faithless, Should a Wife be Untrue?" (which, it may be mentioned, are taken from actual advertisements.)

The crowds move in long columns through theatre doors—and take their seats. Perhaps they arrive in time for the beginning of the featured film and are entertained as they expected to be. But they do not leave then. Maybe there is a comedy (sic) to come, or maybe they find their seats comfortable, and, having nothing more to do than when they came in, just stay. And before they know it an educational, scenic or topical is thrown on the screen.

Every day there are happenings of interest and import that are dimmed in the popular mind by a distance that printed accounts cannot overcome; travelers go all over the world to unfamiliar places and people; scientists make discoveries which illumine the dark phenomena of ordinary life; lovers of nature search out the beautiful and bizarre in every land; factories and farms release a flood of products by machinery and methods that seem magical until explained; inventors create new wonders for the benefit of mankind—but of all these things those who do more running than reading know little or nothing. Many workers in many fields are shut off from the great mass of humanity because there is no means of communication between the exceptional men and the mass, as the mass will not go to public lectures nor read the books and articles in which the works of art, science, and nature are recorded.

But the educational, scenic, and topical films bring the records to the screen. Those who would resist instruction if they saw it coming are caught by the pictures—and held. Culture slips up on them. Education puts one over on them. Their minds are improved—painlessly, even pleasantly, without their realizing it. Many of them, long before they admit the fact to themselves, are entertained. They are interested by what would be decidedly uninteresting in prospect. Their nearly atrophied minds are nourished—and as they come to life begin to crave food, the mental food of scenic and educational films.

Even if comparatively few reach this happy stage of desiring the entertainment of instructive pictures, the others are informed, exposed to a degree, by looking at the scenics and educationals while waiting for the photoplay or for some instinct to urge them from their seats. It may be true that a horse, led to water, will not always drink, but almost any man, led to a motion picture theatre by any motive, will unconsciously absorb something worth while. It happens every day to thousands.

All of this is not meant to ignore the large and increasing number of persons who fearlessly, even eagerly, of their original volition, go to see the educational pictures. Most of them have neither the time nor the training necessary to the habit of reading and attending lectures, and their lives would be lived within more restricted horizons if it were not for the enlarging and enriching contributions of the screen. These people are not the highbrows for whom the lowbrows, in their superiority, have such contempt. They are the uncommon common men and women who frequent motion-picture theatres in greatest numbers.

Also there are those who make use of the screen away from the theatre, in the lecture and class room. Persons who do not study or enter the world of students have no idea of the extent to which motion pictures are used and undoubtedly will be used to supplement lectures and illustrate subjects of teaching. Scientists are more and more calling upon the camera to aid them in research and demonstration. Everything, from mountains to misroscopic organisms, is, or is coming to be, material for the screen.

If one considers these facts and amplifies them by a comprehending imagination, he cannot fail to be impressed with the importance of the screen in popular education, and surely no thoughtful person will underestimate the importance of popular education. Education, in its broad sense, is the equipment of men and women for life. The development of a civilization, the progress of a people, depends upon the character and degree of education, the education of the people, not of the preferred few. The erudition of a handful of savants, the culture of small groups of intellectuals, can never be the vital, vigorous force in the life of humanity that the education of the people can become. When a people is educated, when the men and women one meets on the streets and in popular places are broadly informed and equipped to think, the hope of the world will be bright and the way of the world to that higher state now only faintly recognized in ambitious slogans and idealistic phrases will be clear. Spiritual energy will have a real chance. It is the people who must be educated, and it is the screen, more than any other agency, that can serve in their education.

Of course, as the opportunity of the screen is tremendous, its responsibility is great. Education does not mean simply the dissemination of information nor propaganda for a party or particular creed of politics or religion. The evils and errors of misplaced emphasis and dogmatic prejudice common in so much of the educational effort of today cannot be easily corrected on the screen. Motion pictures, in fact, have to be protected against special dangers in addition to the universal menace of class and partisan bias which makes pure education by any means all but impossible. Sound knowledge should provide the raw material of instruction, and instruction should be given from all conflicting points of view and the point of view of unadulterated truth. This is the ideal toward which effort should be directed. Propaganda is inevitable, and, if the propaganda of every social and political class is presented as propaganda, it is well. What is dangerous is that the propaganda of a ruling majority or of political and social bosses will be issued as pure education and accepted as such by the people who need the pure education denied them in order to analyze and evaluate what is offered them. Those who would make and use motion pictures for education are under a solemn obligation to be faithful to humanity by devoting their best intelligence to the selection and presentation of their material so that it will educate, that is, equip men and women to live their own lives at their greatest capacity, and not insidiously pervert their hearts and minds for the purposes of any self-interested institution or order or design.

To seek to appreciate and lead others to appreciate what the educational, scenic, and topical motion pictures are doing and can do—to point out their present faults, as they are seen, and voice warnings of the dangers actual and imminent—to emphasize the immeasurable and as yet but little imagined possibilities of the educational screen—to contribute, in all of these and related ways, to the mighty work of popular education—surely here is not only reason, but imperative opportunity, for taking "the movies" seriously, even if no such thing as a photoplay existed.

Still there remains the photoplay, whose enemies and friends, as many as have read this far, are by now no longer remaining still. They maintain that, after all, if motion pictures are to claim any place as an art in public entertainment, the claim must be based upon the photoplay, and they are right. So, for whatever it may be worth, something will be said about the photoplay in the next chapter of this intermittent article.

IN THE NEWS NET.

D. W. Griffith's local office announces that in the near future some New York theatre will begin a season of a repertory of Griffith films. "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and "Hearts of the World" will be shown and also a number of the productions made by Mr. Griffith in his Biograph, Reliance, Majestic, and Fine Arts days, including "The Sands of Dee," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Single Standard," "Home," and "The Escape." The players to be seen in these pictures will include many present-day stars who received their early training under the Griffith direction, among them being Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Constance Talmadge, Blanche Sweet, Dorothy Gish, Seena Owen, Miriam Cooper, Robert Harron, and Henry B. Walthal.

A number of new productions will be shown for the first time in the East, one of them being "The Fall of Babylon," which was recently presented in Los Angeles. It is expected that Mr. Griffith will come to New York to take personal charge of the exhibition.

Captain Robert Warwick has returned from Europe and announces that he will take up his screen work again, although he has not decided which of a number of offers to accept.

Thomas H. Ince has signed a contract to continue producing Paramount and Artcraft pictures for a year from Sept. 1 next.

Maurice A. Kashin, managing director of the Broadway, has gone South, on the advice of his physician, to recuperate from an attack of influenza.

Another Language Makes Another Man!

This is the age of specialization—But the man who supplements his special training and education with a foreign language doubles his commercial value and opens up new possibilities and new fields of opportunity. Think of what the markets of South America alone offer to the man who can speak Spanish! Greater business, higher salary and position awaits the man who is capable.

You can learn a foreign language at home in comfort—in the privacy of your own room. The voice of the best native teachers will speak to you, correctly and distinctly, slowly or rapidly, as you prefer. It will talk to you during your spare moments or for hours at a time—whenever you are in the mood to listen—until you have mastered the correct accent and pronunciation.

You can acquire this great gift on your own phonograph with the disc records of the

and Rosenthal's Practical Linguistry.

With this method foreign language study becomes a pleasant mental diversion. All the old-time drudgery of memorizing unnecessary rules, verbs, declensions, etc., is eliminated. You learn in the natural way—the way you learned your own tongue—hearing the living voice pronounce each word and phrase. Anyone can learn a foreign language who hears it spoken often enough, and by this method you can hear it as often as you desire. It is highly endorsed and recommended by leading Educators and Authorities. Send for Free Book, Dr. Richard S. Rosenthal's "Foreign Language Study," or call for demonstration.

ARE YOU QUALIFIED?

Excellent positions are now open to all those who qualify, not only for Government reconstruction work, but to fill the many vacancies in leading New York firms. It is the general opinion that stenography is a very difficult study to master. Such is not the case, as the average Moon student can take dictation at the rate of 100 words per minute at the expiration of 30 days by the Boyd Syllab-ic System. So confident are we that any young man or woman with an average education can attain a speed of 100 words per minute in shorthand in 30 days by our Syl-lab-ic System that we invite you to enroll at our risk. If, after becoming a student at one of our schools and attending for three days, you feel that it will be impossible for you to master stenography in 30 days' time, we will cheerfully return the entire fee. Call, phone or write for FREE trial lessons and the Moon catalog.

BARRIE AND THE TRIANGLE

Remote as is the triangle from Barrie as he is popularly pictured, Sir James deals definitely with it in the first act of "Dear Brutus," and the scene is of interest as instancing an almost new treatment of a well-worn situation. Enter John Purdie and Joanna Trout. Purdie's wife is in the house, but his arm is around Joanna's waist. Lob, their queer old host, has just finished his scene with the flowers—petting them and whispering to them.

"WHAT were you saying to them, Lob?" inquires Joanna.

"I was just saying—'Two's company, three's none,'" replies Lob, as he stalks out.

"That man—he suspects!" cries Joanna.

"Who minds him?" comforts Purdie, rushing to her side.

"And Mabel?" goes on Joanna. (Mabel is Mrs. Purdie.) "She saw you kiss my hand. Oh, Jack, if Mabel suspects!"

"There's nothing for her to suspect," and he takes her hand.

"No, there isn't, is there? Jack, I'm not doing anything wrong, am I?"

By this time Joanna is in Purdie's arms. The scene goes on:

Purdie (passionately)—You!

Joanna (nestling closer)—Mabel is your wife, Jack. I should hate myself if I did anything that was disloyal to her.

Purdie—Those eyes could never be disloyal, my lady of the svelt blue eyes! Oh, the sveltness of you! Why are you so svelt?

Joanna—Ah, Jack! All I want is to help her and you.

Purdie—I know—how well I know—my own brave love!

Joanna—I'm very fond of Mabel, Jack. I should like to be the best friend she has in the world.

Purdie (caressing her)—You are, dearest! No woman ever had a better friend.

Joanna—And yet I don't think she really likes me. (She puts her arms around his neck and draws him closer.) I wonder why.

Joanna suggests that Mabel doesn't appreciate her husband's finer qualities. He agrees, complacently, and finding her so sympathetic he continues:

"I often think, Joanna, that I am rather like a flower that has never had the sun to shine on it nor the rain to water it."

"You almost break my heart," shudders Joanna.

"I suppose," and Purdie rubs his hands cheerfully, "there is no more lonely man than I walking the earth to-day."

Of course, Joanna is his star—she has made a better man of him. She has made him kinder to Mabel—made him think of special little ways of giving her pleasure. For instance, the day he first met Joanna he went home and read to Mabel for an hour. After the first time he embraced her, he gave Mabel a ruby bracelet.

Purdie—Those new earrings of hers—they are in memory of the first day you called me Jack. Her Paquin gown—the one with the beads—was because you let me kiss you.

Joanna (pressing her cheek to his)—I didn't exactly let you.

Purdie—No, but you have such a dear way of giving in.

Joanna (suddenly)—Jack, she hasn't worn that gown of late.

Purdie—Nor the jewels, either. I think she has some sort of idea now that when I give her anything nice it means that you have been nice to me. She has rather a suspicious nature, Mabel; she never used to have it, but it seems to be growing on her. I wonder why, I wonder why, Joanna? (He kisses her passionately as Mrs. Purdie looks in through the window behind them.)

Joanna (starting up)—Who was that?

Purdie (going to the window)—There's no one.

Joanna—Yes, there was. If it was Mabel! Oh, Jack, (she holds out her arms to him,) if she saw us she would think you were kissing me! (Purdie hurries into her embrace and kisses her again just as Mrs. Purdie comes in through the door.)

Mrs. Purdie (Smiling)—I am so sorry to interrupt you, Jack, but please wait a moment before you kiss her again. Excuse me, Joanna. (She crosses to the window and carefully draws the curtains.) I didn't want the others to see. They mightn't understand how noble you are, Jack. You can go on now. (And she exits, still smiling.)

Purdie and Joanna have stood as if thunderstruck. As Mabel closes the door behind her, Joanna starts forward.

"Oh, how contemptible!" she cries. "Mabel!"

Mrs. Purdie (returning)—Did you call me, Joanna?

Joanna (haughtily)—I insist on an explanation. What were you doing out there, Mabel?

Mrs. Purdie (softly)—I was looking for something I have lost.

Purdie—Anything important?

Mrs. Purdie—I used to fancy it, Jack; it is my husband's love. You don't happen to have picked it up, Joanna? If you don't value it very much I should like it back—the pieces, I mean.

Joanna (indignantly)—Mabel, I will not be talked to in that way. To imply that I—your husband—oh, shame!

Purdie (looking rather foolish)—I must say, Mabel, that I am a little disappointed in you. I certainly understood that you had gone up stairs to put on your boots.

Mrs. Purdie (sarcastically)—Poor old Jack! (To Joanna.) As for you—you fox—

Joanna (magnanimously)—I forgive you, Mabel. You will be sorry for this afterward.

Purdie—Not a word against Joanna, Mabel. If you knew how nobly she has spoken of you.

Joanna—She does know. She has been listening.

Mrs. Purdie—Fox!

Joanna—Sneak!

Purdie (stepping between them)—This is a man's business. I must be open with you now, Mabel. It is the manlier way. If you wish it I shall always be true to you in word and deed. It is your right. But I cannot pretend that Joanna is not the one woman in the world for me. If I had met her before you—it's Kismet, I suppose.

Joanna—Too late! Too late!

Mrs. Purdie—I suppose you never knew what true love was till you met her, Jack?

Purdie—You force me to say it. Joanna and I are as one person. We have not a thought at variance. We are one rather than two.

Mrs. Purdie (looking at Joanna)—Yes, and that's the one! I am so sorry to have marred your lives.

Purdie (thinking himself rather fine)—If any blame there is, it is all mine. She is as svelt as—as the driven snow. The minute I mentioned love to her she told me to desist.

Mrs. Purdie—Not she!

Joanna—That shows how you were sneaking again. Mabel, don't you see how splendid he is!

Mrs. Purdie (scornfully)—Not quite, Joanna.

EDISON ON EDUCATIONALS.

MOVING pictures will ultimately take the place of textbooks in schools and colleges, according to Thomas A. Edison, as quoted in the current number of the Educational Film Magazine. And Mr. Edison believes that the substitution of films for books should be made as soon and systematically as possible.

"My impression is," he says, "that the Government ought to help in this work, for it is one of the greatest things in the world, and perhaps the Government should establish a plant for the production of educational films. It should be a fireproof building of concrete where the films could be made and kept in safety and at the right temperature, and there should be vast fireproof vaults, where all valuable and irreplaceable reels might be stored. A great film library of educational and industrial subjects should be built up in Washington. Then these films could be issued on the rental system to all institutions in the United States, even to the most remote rural schoolhouses, and the system could be so operated that it would pay its own way, would be on a self-supporting basis like the Pension Office or Post Office."

Asserting that "anything which can be taught to the ear can be taught better to the eye," Mr. Edison continues:

"The moving object on the screen, the closest possible approximation to reality, is almost the same as bringing that object itself before the child or taking the child to that object.

"Film teaching will be done without any books whatsoever. The only textbooks needed will be for the teacher's own use. The films will serve as guideposts to these teacher instruction books, not the books as guides to the films. The pupils will learn everything there is to learn, in every grade from the lowest to the highest. The long years now spent in cramming indigestible knowledge down unwilling young throats and in examining young minds on subjects which they can never learn under the present system will be cut down marvelously, waste will be eliminated, and the youth of every land will at last become actually educated.

"If the Government should establish a film factory, with a special department for distribution on a small rental basis, and introduce such an educational system so as to pay running expenses, I venture to predict that it would bring about a revolutionary change for the better in our entire school organization."

By making "every classroom and every assembly hall a movie show, 100 per cent. attendance" will be assured, in Mr. Edison's opinion. "Why, you won't be able to keep boys and girls away from school then," he says. "They'll get there ahead of time and scramble for good seats, and they'll stay late, begging to see some of the films over again. I'd like to be a boy again when film teaching becomes universal."

TABLET IN HONOR OF LEWIS MORGAN

Centennial of Historian and Protector of Indians to be Observed—Wrote of Iroquois "League of Nations"

ONE reason that fame came to Lewis Morgan is that he never sought it. Throughout his life he undertook the work that was next to hand without imagining any gain or glory for himself, and thus the recognition of his achievements, though late in coming, is of the kind that endures.

Lewis Henry Morgan was born at Aurora, N. Y., Nov. 21, 1818, and the fine old house in which he first saw the light is still standing. On its outer wall has been placed a simple bronze plate, properly inscribed. A more elaborate memorial tablet, 25 by 37 inches, will be placed in the Library of Wells College at Aurora—of which Mr. Morgan was a trustee from its founding—by a group of Morgan's friends and admirers. This tablet, designed by Edward H. Gohl of Auburn, an adopted Onondaga, is now temporarily on exhibition in the Memorial Hall of the American Museum of Natural History.

In 1840 Morgan was graduated from Union College and, after due apprenticeship, entered upon the practice of the law. In 1846 the attempt of some not very scrupulous promoters to rob the Senecas of their lands seemed to have succeeded. The lands were valuable, the Indians were poor, unfriended, ignorant of the white man's law. Morgan, with other generous citizens of Western New York, took up the cause of the Senecas and, after long efforts, saved a part of the reservation. In token of their gratitude and confidence the Senecas adopted him into their tribe, bestowing on him the name of Ta-ya-da-o-wuh-kuh, explained by some as "one lying across," that is, a bridge or bond of union between Indians and white men.

Thus Morgan came to know the lore and history of the Senecas and of the Iroquois Confederacy, of which the Seneca nation was so important a member. This opened the door to the making of two great books, the first describing the political structure of the Iroquois Confederacy, the second developing the theory of the social organization and evolution of the human race.

In 1851 Morgan wrote and published the League of the Iroquois, an account of that league of nations established about 1450 by the five Iroquois peoples of Central New York, which preserved the peace among them for more than three centuries. This Federal Democracy, organized by a barbarous people, was presented to the Thirteen Colonies by Benjamin Franklin as a model for their own union, so that its influence can be historically traced even in the great events now in progress.

In the preparation of this book Mr. Morgan had two associates, then, like himself, unknown young men, each of whom afterward became prominent Charles Talbot Porter became one of our great engineers, the improver of the steam engine, author of valuable engineering works, and recipient of the John Fritz medal. Ely S. Parker was a Seneca Sachem, an engineer, a Brigadier General in the Union Army, a member of Grant's staff, and writer of the terms of Lee's surrender.

The book is the first complete scientific account of an Indian tribe ever published. Merely as a contribution to ethnology it is a masterpiece, and its value as an aid to our knowledge of the history of our country and of our constitution gives it additional merit.

In his Iroquois researches Mr. Morgan made discoveries of an absolutely revolutionary character. He found that the beginnings of society in the family, the clan and the nation were far different from anything that modern man had imagined. He developed the history of family relationship, of tribal organization, of progress in civilization. It is a commonplace now, but was a startling novelty then, to say that human society began and, in its highest development, will return to the rule of the people; that kings and aristocracy are temporary phases, "pathologic conditions of the body politic" which it will outgrow.

These researches were published in 1877 in Morgan's greatest work, "Ancient Society," a storehouse of wisdom which places its author in the rare class of Newton and Darwin.

Morgan's works are rare and mostly out of print, but their influence has been worldwide. A world-promise is contained in the words from "Ancient Society," reproduced at the foot of the Morgan memorial tablet.

"Democracy in government, brotherhood in society, equality in rights and privileges, and universal education foreshadow the next higher plane of society to which experience, intelligence, and knowledge are steadily tending. It will be a revival in a higher form of the liberty, equality, and fraternity of the ancient gentes."

Such, at least it seems is the doctrine of Stearns Coal and Lumber Company v. Williams, 198 Southwestern Reporter, 54, where "the court refused to permit an expert electrician, while giving his testimony, to make an experiment upon the plaintiff, and to show that the volume of electricity which other evidence showed was passing, through the wires with which the plaintiff came in contact at the time of the accident could be withstood by plaintiff without any injurious results. While in this case the expert witness was positive that no injurious results would happen, yet it was the very contention of the plaintiff that such injuries did result, and to recover for which he filed his suit."

EVEN CUBA MAY HAVE PROHIBITION LAWS

With Canada Booked for a Drinkless Future, Americans Face Prospect of Having No Anti-Liquor Neighbor Except Mexico

Since prohibition became assured in the United States there has been much speculation as to the prospects of a corresponding reform wave in contiguous and neighboring countries—Canada, Cuba, and Mexico. Dispatches from Canada show that Orders of Council make that country "dry" for twelve months after the end of the war, and that plebiscites already held in the provinces indicate a prevailing sentiment in favor of permanent prohibition. So far there is no prospect of Mexico's developing an anti-liquor law. The article below shows that in Cuba there is at least a fair chance of prohibition victory, in spite of the oft-heard prophecies that the island would never go "dry" and that Havana would be a wide open holiday resort for Americans seeking a rest from the new blue laws at home.

Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.
HAVANA, Jan. 29.

THE announced intention of making Cuba "dry" has not been taken seriously in Cuba as yet. But the proposition to make the United States dry was not taken seriously when William Jennings Bryan first talked about it!

A start has been made here in the shape of a bill prepared for presentation to the Lower House. It is framed by Señor Cecilio Acosta, a popular young Congressman who previously presented a bill providing for the control of the sale of habit-forming drugs. There are indications that his new bill, though a subject of much ridicule now, may be the first step toward putting Cuba finally on the side of prohibition.

One great obstacle at present is the fact that Cuba's $35,000,000 loan made with the Speyers is secured by a tax on the manufacture and sale of liquors. Before national prohibition could become a reality it would be necessary for some other means to be found to take care of this loan. But confidence is expressed in some quarters that a way will be found out of this difficulty if popular opinion in Cuba can be persuaded by the "dry" forces to admit that benefits are to be derived from the abolishment of the liquor traffic.

Others take the stand that Cuba is a place that demonstrates to the world that unrestricted liquor traffic tends to make people temperate rather than intemperate, and it is pointed out that, although one seems to find cafés serving alcoholic drinks in every block of Havana, it is seldom anybody is seen intoxicated on the streets. It is also argued that the natives have not the vicious treating habit so common in the United States. They will sit down at a café table and, while one man will take a glass of brandy or beer, another will take ice cream or a glass of milk without fear of ridicule from his companions, and instead of round after round they may sit an hour at a table over one round of drinks.

Nevertheless, statistics show that alcoholism is slowly on the increase in Cuba. Every day sees more cases of drunkenness among Cubans on the police court dockets than there were a few years ago, and many autopsies in the city morgue show that alcoholism brought the victims there.

The full text of the Cuban prohibition bill is as follows:

"The suppression of the manufacture, sale, and consumption of alcoholic and spirituous beverages constitutes at this time one of the greatest world problems. The United States of America, a nation that has undertaken this important reform, is giving to the universe a series of examples worthy of imitation.

"We are under obligation to follow out every honorable trail. If it is true that in the first moments of adopting a measure of such transcendant importance vested interests are injured and most important industries disappear, it is likewise true that in the shadow of such measures are laid the foundations of morality and public hygiene.

"Our alcohols will always have an assured market for their sale. The industries devoted to the manufacture of strong drinks will have to devote their energies in other branches of commerce. In every civilized country the doors of big business are open to every initiative.

"In Cuba, in framing a law aimed at the ends stated, we have to take into account that the law providing for the $35,000,000 loan provides sundry taxes upon national and foreign alcoholic beverages. Of course, as soon as manufacture within the country is suppressed importation will be prohibited, and to supply the revenues thus lost others will have to be created, which in the end shall suffice to pay the interest on the loan referred to. We will not, in order to provide a benefit to the nation, work an immediate injury upon all the manufacturers. A period of a year shall be granted for the sale of all alcoholic beverages that may be in the country. Beginning from that date there shall be in force the following law:

"Article I.—In the territory of the republic the manufacture of alcoholic beverages of any kind is strictly prohibited, and likewise the importation of said beverages. The sale and consumption of such drinks are also prohibited.

"Article II.—Alcohol can only be sold in the distilleries to the retail establishments and the foreign commercial houses and in drug stores and in grocery stores for fuel.

"Article III.—All alcoholic beverages, either national or foreign, found for sale after this law goes into effect shall be confiscated by any agent of authority whatsoever and be destroyed.

"Article IV.—The revenue duties classified as those of the first class by the law of Feb. 28, 1903, under the thirty-five-million-dollar loan will be supplied by the present stamp law in the part relating to business deals, capital, inheritance, and savings. All of the rest of the said law is annulled from the date that this law takes effect.

"Article V.—All infringements of this law shall be punished by the courts of justice at the instance of any citizen or agent of authority, the punishment to be meted out to manufacturers of drinks being major arrest and $500 fine; merchants who sell such liquors shall be subjected to one-half of the same penalties, and the consumer shall be subjected to a fine of $50. These penalties and fines shall be repeated in case of repetition of the offense.

"Article VI.—Those infringing the foregoing precepts include manufacturers and sellers of artificial drinks or so-called soft drinks on an alcoholic base, whether manufactured in this country or imported from abroad.

"Article VII.—The importation, sale, or manufacture of any kind of sweets on an alcoholic or liquor base, including pastes, bon-bons, and other things, shall be considered as an infringement of this law.

"Article VIII.—Tonics and things analogous sold in drug stores and pharmacies are likewise comprised in this law and shall be sold only on the prescription of physicians. All tonic wines shall first be passed upon by the National Laboratory, and their sale authorized in order not to infringe upon the precepts of this law.

"Article IX.—The manufacture and sale of national and foreign beers is likewise prohibited and are included in the penalties of this law, which shall take effect three hundred and sixty-five days after its publication in the Official Gazette of the Republic."

CLAIMS OF NATIONS THAT MUST BE SETTLED AT VERSAILLES

Map of the World Will Show Changes Not Only in Europe but in Asia, Africa, and Oceanica—Aspirations of the Belligerents and Others—Where Rival Ambitions Clash—New Nations Already at Loggerheads

THE object of these two maps is to show the parts of the world affected by the aims of the European nations, as summarized in an Associated Press dispatch from Paris published last Monday.

The section marked "AA" on the map of Europe, Asia, Africa, and Oceanica is dealt with in detail on the large map of Europe underneath.

Asterisks indicate territories dealt with on the upper map.

Each number after the headings, in the General Key, refers to a claim. Thus F-1 is Alsace-Lorraine, claimed by France as a result of the victory over Germany. In cases where there is a conflict of claims between nations, different headings will be found grouped close together—as, for instance, along the Eastern Adriatic coast, claimed both by Italy and Jugoslavia, (or Serbia.) Another similar instance is that of the Aegean Islands, now in dispute between Italy and Greece.

No attempt has been made to show those territories in dispute which were not specifically mentioned in the dispatch from Paris on which these maps have been based. For this reason the only parts of the former Russian Empire dealt with are Russian Poland, Lithuania, &c., over which controversy is raging between Poles, Ukrainians, and others. Similarly, no attempt has been made to show the various States into which Germany and Austria-Hungary have split up.

Some of the former German colonies not specifically mentioned in the dispatch are likewise not denoted on the maps.

General Key to Maps.

AA—Central Europe. All territories comprised in this part of the world are dealt with on the map of Europe on this page. Asterisks denote the territories shown on the upper map.

FRENCH CLAIMS.

F-1—Alsace-Lorraine. Claimed by France unconditionally.

F-2—Sarre Basin. France desires also to annex this region.

F-3—Rhenish Palatinate. If the French idea of buffer States between France and Germany becomes a reality, this may become such a State.

F-4—Rhenish Prussia. May become a buffer State between France and Germany, like the Palatinate.

F-5—Left Bank of the Rhine Not Comprised in F-3 and F-4. France insists that the Peace Conference shall forbid military works of any kind—barracks, bridgeheads, forts, fortresses—in this zone. The French feeling is that the people inhabiting this zone should be free to decide for themselves whether they wish to join France, form an independent State, or return to Germany.

F-6—Syria. The French Government does not ask for a protectorate in Syria in the ordinary sense, because it considers that the population there is too advanced to make a protectorate necessary; but France, on account of her traditional interests in that country, feels that she should be called upon to exercise some sort of guardianship or guidance until Syria is fully able to govern herself.

BRITISH CLAIMS.

Gb-1—German Islands South of the Equator. Great Britain proposes to take mandatory power over these islands for Australia.

Gb-2—German Southwest Africa. Great Britain proposes to take mandatory power over this territory for the Union of South Africa.

Gb-4—Arabia, (parts.) Great Britain expects to have mandate here. Over what parts of Arabia this will extend has not been specified as yet.

I-4—Avlona and Its Hinterland. Here Italian claims of annexation conflict with Albanian claims.

I-5—Albania Proper. Italy wants a protectorate over this region.

I-6—Aegean Islands. These were taken by Italy from Turkey in the Tripolitan War. Italy wants to annex them. So does Greece.

I-7—Province of Adalia. This section of Asia Minor is claimed by Italy if France and Great Britain take territory in Asia Minor.

R-2—Southern Debrudja. Ceded to Rumania by Bulgaria after the second Balkan war. Rumania wishes to retain this region, which, with Bessarabia, would give her command of the mouth of the Danube.

R-3—Bukovina. This former Austro-Hungarian crownland is claimed by Rumania.

R-4—Transylvania. Formerly Austro-Hungarian territory, now claimed by Rumania.

R-5—Banat of Temesvar. Hitherto part of Hungary, now claimed by Rumania and also by Serbia (Jugoslavia.)

SERBIAN (JUGOSLAVIC) CLAIMS.

S-1—Bosnia and Herzegovina. Seized by Austria-Hungary in 1908 and now claimed as part of the Jugoslavic nation.

S-2—Croatia (Inland.) Claimed by Jugoslavia.

S-3—Fiume and Croatian Seaboard. Here Jugoslavic and Italian claims are in sharp conflict.

S-4—Dalmatian and Albanian Islands. Here Italian and Jugoslavic claims also conflict.

S-5—Montenegro. The union of Montenegro and Serbia as part of a greater Jugoslav State has been voted by the Montenegrin Parliament, but the faction representing King Nicholas of Montenegro and his adherents protests against a union which shall not leave to Montenegro entire local self-government.

GREEK CLAIMS.

G-1—Northern Epirus. Claimed by Greece.

G-2—Thrace. Claimed by Greece with the exception of Constantinople and the shores of the Bosporus and Dardanelles. (Greek extreme claims, however, include Constantinople.)

G-3—Vilayet of Smyrna. Former Turkish territory in Asia Minor claimed by Greece.

G-4—Former Turkish Islands in Eastern Mediterranean. Claimed by Greece. They include the islands known as the Dodecanesus, claimed by Italy.

BULGARIAN CLAIMS.

Bg-1—Southern Macedonia. Although Bulgaria capitulated without conditions, she has not abandoned hope of national expansion. Bulgarian ambitions include parts of Southern Macedonia.

Bg-2—Aegean Coast. Bulgaria hopes to get some territory here, despite her abject surrender.

Bg-3—Thrace. Here, too, Bulgaria has hopes, in conflict with Greece.

CZECHOSLOVAK CLAIMS.

C-1—German Saxony and German Silesia. In addition to the territories formerly of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, comprising Bohemia, Moravia, and the Slovak regions of Northern Hungary, now constituting the new republic of Czechoslovakia, the Czechoslovaks also want parts of German Saxony and German Silesia, in conflict with the Poles.

C-2—Galicia (Western.) Czechoslovaks and Poles are presenting rival claims to this region.

C-3—Galicia (Eastern.) In this territory Czechoslovak and Ruthenian claims conflict.

C-4—Transylvania. Fringes of the sphere claimed here by the Rumanians are also wanted by the Czechoslovaks.

C-5—"The Corridor Southward." Some Czechoslovaks want their country to have expansion southward over a frontage on the Danube and a corridor to the Adriatic.

POLISH CLAIMS.

P-1—Galicia (About Lemberg.) Polish troops have been actually fighting for possession of this region with Ruthenians and Ukrainians.

P-2—Galicia (Western.) In dispute between Poles and Czechoslovaks.

CHINESE CLAIMS.

Ch-1—Kiaochow (Tsing Tao.) The Chinese want it returned to them by Japan, who captured it from Germany.

SWISS CLAIMS.

Sw-1—Neutral Rhine. Switzerland wishes to have the Rhine declared a neutral stream, thus gaining an outlet to the sea. This is in accord with French desires, since, if Alsace-Lorraine becomes French from Basle northward and an independent buffer State is erected out of the Palatinate and Rhenish Prussia, as suggested by Marshal Foch, it will be necessary to neutralise the Rhine.

SCANDINAVIAN NATIONS.

Sc-1—Northern Schleswig. Seized by Prussia from Denmark in 1864. Denmark wants it back. She has not asked for the rest of Schleswig and Holstein, also taken by Prussia at the same time.

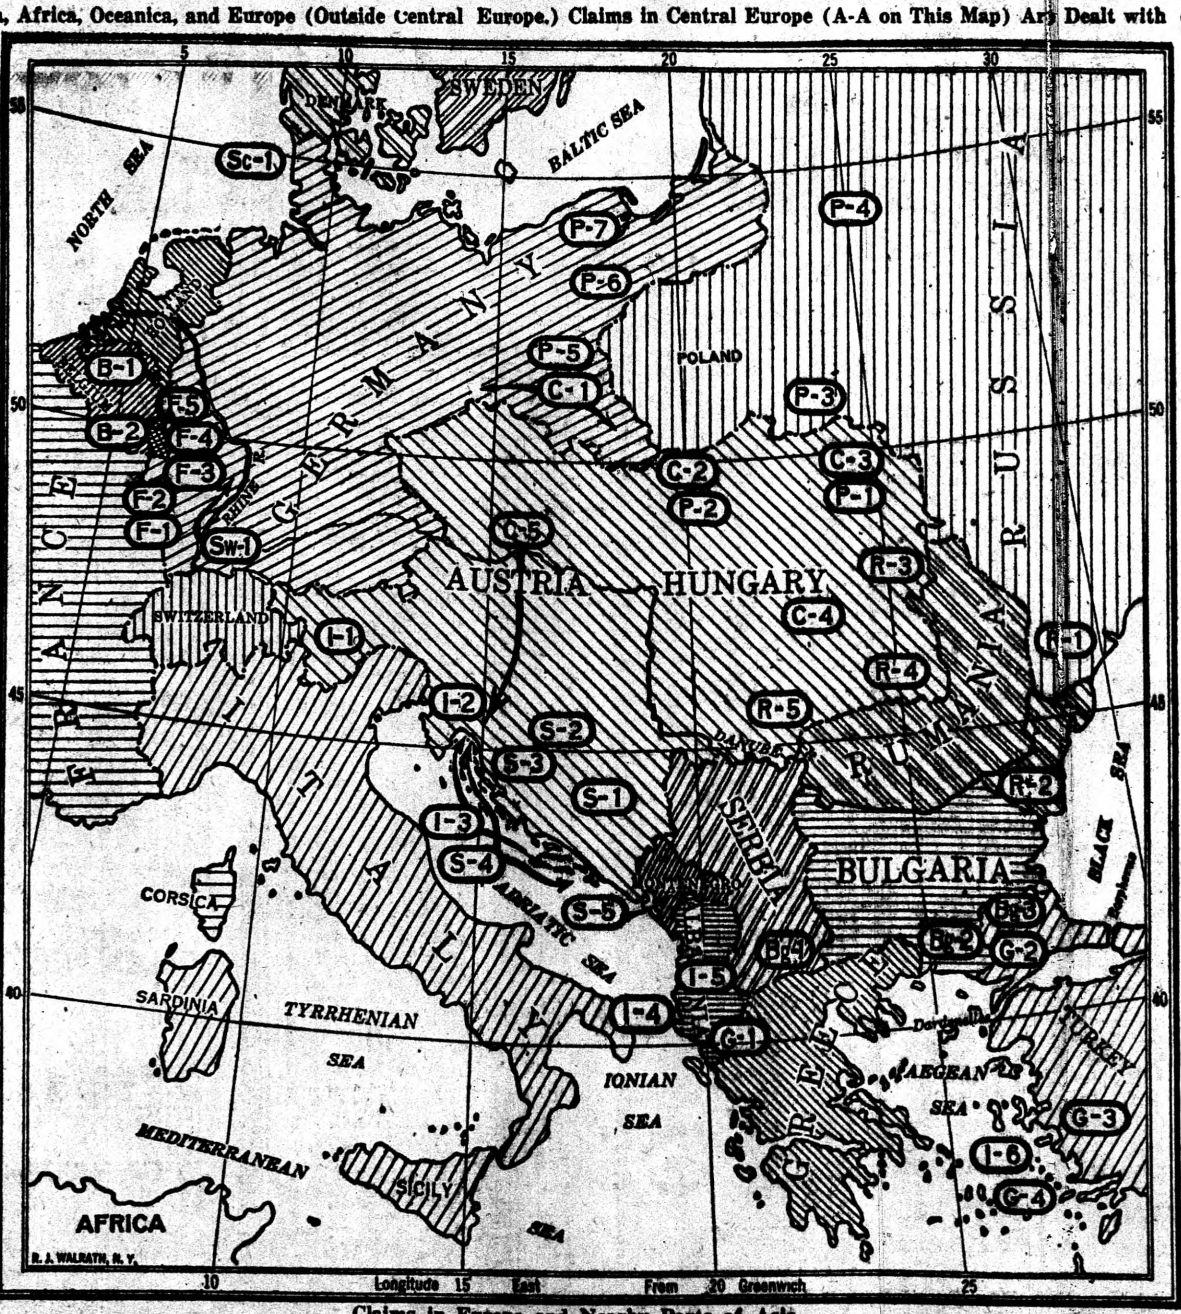
Sc-3—Aland Islands. A strong movement in Sweden favors the union with Sweden of the Aland Islands, (formerly Russian,) which are regarded by the Swedes as the naval key to Stockholm, the Swedish capital. Swedish interests here are in conflict with those of Finland.

FINLAND.

Fd-1—Russian Karelia. Nothing has been heard since the collapse of Germany of earlier Finnish plans to obtain an outlet by the annexation of parts of this region, lying between Finland and the Murman coast.

Fd-2—Finmark. The Finnish plans of expansion mentioned under Fd-1 even contemplated annexation to Finland of parts of Finmark, which belongs to Norway.



Claims in Europe and Nearby Parts of Asia.

PRO-ALLY AUSTRIAN SOLDIERS

The article of which portions are printed here was written some months ago, while the war was still in progress, for the Committee on Public Information, but has not appeared before in this city.

By Professor Voyslav M. Yovanovitch, formerly official "Eyewitness" of the Serbian Army.

ONE of the greatest embarrassments of the Austrian General Staff is the heterogeneous composition of the army of the empire. It is impossible to send men from Bosnia, Croatia, and the other Serbo-Croatian speaking Austrian provinces against the Serbs and Montenegrins; the Italians of Trentino cannot be used against King Victor Emmanuel's troops, the Rumanians of Transylvania and the Bukowina against the Kingdom of Rumania, or the Czechs of Bohemia against Russian or Serbian troops. Experience has shown that they desert en masse to the so-called enemy.

That this is not a legend but a stern reality I can vouch from personal experience during the first campaign in Serbia. After the Austrian defeat in December, 1914, when 65,000 Austrians surrendered to the Serbs, I was with the Division of Timok under the command of Colonel Zhivanovitch. I was with him one evening in his headquarters at Mladenovats when a dozen Austrian officers taken prisoners were brought to be examined. As soon as they were brought in the Serbian commander looked at one of them and cried: "What, Jovo, is it you?" and flung his arms around him. The prisoner, a tall elderly man wearing the uniform of a Lieutenant in the Austrian Army, looking very tired, although very glad, was Jovo Banjanin, chief editor of the Serbian journal Srbobran at Žagreb (Agram) and Croatian delegate to the Hungarian Parliament. As officer of reserve he had been mobilized and with his regiment sent against his racial brothers in Serbia.

Such instances could be multiplied by hundreds. During the first Austro-Serbian campaign the Serbian-Austrians surrendered by companies, battalions, and even entire regiments, often to such inferior forces as proved that their one desire was to join their Serbian brothers. On one occasion a Serbian patrol of two men got lost in a forest. Suddenly they found themselves surrounded by hundreds of Austrian soldiers. Seeing the hopelessness of resistance, they announced that they surrendered. "No; it is we who surrender to you," said the "captors"; "we have been looking for three days for a Serbian regiment to give ourselves up."

Many Volunteers.

Thousands of these Jugoslavs (Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes) volunteered to enter the Serbian ranks and to aid in the resistance to Austria. This required the more courage because when they put on Serbian uniforms they were fighting with a rope round their necks, as they knew no mercy would be shown them by the Austrians if recaptured.

When the Austrian military authorities saw the impossibility of utilising Serbian-speaking subjects against Serbia, the Croatian and other Jugoslav regiments were sent to the Russian front. But even here there was no improvement. The Austrian Jugoslavs refused to fight against their brother Slavs of Russia, and over 150,000 of them surrendered. As soon as they reached the concentration camps, 50,000 asked to be mobilized against Austria. A considerable number were sent in 1915 via the Black Sea and the Danube to Serbia, where they arrived a few days before the German attack on the Danube front.

But the main effort of the Austrian Serbo-Croats was made in Russia itself. Here three full divisions (or over 50,000 men) were recruited and attached to the army operating with the Rumanian forces. These divisions were organised by the officers of the Royal Serbian Army, under the command of General Zhivkovich, the defender of Belgrade.

The Serbo-Croatians were not the only Austrian troops who refused to fight against their brother Slavs of Russia. Thousands of Czechs followed their example, until the Russian military authorities were able to form independent Czech divisions. One of the most notorious cases of military dissatisfaction in the Austro-Hungarian Army is that of the Twenty-eighth Czech Regiment, (known as the Children of Prague,) which left for the front to "fight" Russians singing the famous Pan-Slav hymn, "He j Slovani," which contains a verse in honor of the Russians and French as friends in the struggle against the Germans. Not contented with this, they carried before them a white banner bearing as inscription an extra verse written for the same hymn to the effect that "we are marching against the Russians, but nobody knows why." So strong was the feeling of both the soldiers and the crowd that the officers of the regiment did not venture to remove the banner.

At an early opportunity the regiment passed over, officers and men together, to the Russians. On April 17, 1915, an army order was issued by the Austrian Emperor, proclaiming its disgrace and temporary dissolution. Similar incidents occurred in the first Bosnian regiment, Eighth, Thirtieth, Eighty-eighth, and One Hundred and Second Regiments and in the Eleventh Regiment of Landwehr. Decimation had been frequent, and if the number of military executions ever becomes known it will be found to have reached an appalling figure.

At first Jugoslav and Czech prisoners in Russia were enrolled together, but when the numbers began to run to tens of thousands, a fresh distribution was made and three Czech and three Serbo-Croat-Slovenian or Jugoslav divisions were formed.

The services rendered by these divisions when operating on the Rumanian front were of the most brilliant description. The Serbian troops were repeatedly cited in the orders of the day for acts of great courage.

Refused to Fight Allies.

But it was not only on the question of fighting against their brother Slavs that the Austrian Czech and Serbo-Croatian troops have gone over to the other side. They declined to fight on any front against the Allies. This is proved by the dispatch sent to the Foreign Minister of the Serbian Government at Corfu, signed by twenty-four Jugoslav officers who served in the Austrian Army and who surrendered to the Italians on the Isonzo front.

LOOK CLOSELY! FOOD COSTS DROP A LITTLE

Cold Storage Warehouses Are Choked, and Release May Further Affect Market—Comparisons of Larder Prices

FOOD prices are going down, although the decline is gentle. The quotations along some lines are considerably lower than they were a few weeks ago, when the purchase of a pound of creamery butter and a dozen eggs left little worth keeping out of a $2 bill. The market took an upward fling at the end of the week which closed yesterday, but those who see light ahead call it only a temporary reversal of form.

The investigation in Washington of the packing interests caused a decided drop in the prices of meat during the last few days of January. Now that the legislative skies are clearing, the prices of beef, lamb, veal and mutton are climbing again.

Commission merchants and retail dealers are looking for another rise in the cost of living, but local officials believe that before many weeks the people will really be getting the benefit of lower prices. Dr. Jonathan Day, Commissioner of Markets, is doing all he can to have the stalls which the city leases stabilize the prices of the food which the public uses in the largest quantities. The smaller dealers throughout the city, who have been getting 4 or 5 cents a pound more on many commodities than the prices charged by the merchants of the public markets, have been taking heed.

The cold storage warehouses in and around New York are filled almost to bursting with food supplies of all kinds. Wholesale merchants who had expected the war to last much longer than it did had been holding many tons of eggs and dairy products. Enormous quantities of butter, commandeered for the Allies, have been released. This is one of the reasons that there has been a decline in the prices of the products of dairy and chicken yard.

The Fall of the Egg.

It was only a few weeks ago that eggs were selling in the grocery stores at 80 cents a dozen, and sometimes the prices soared to $1.25. First-class eggs were sold yesterday in Washington Market at 55 cents a dozen and the fancy white Leghorn product brought from 60 to 65 cents a dozen. The prices had been even a little lower than that, but dealers, availing themselves of the increased demand, had sent the price up 4 cents a dozen at wholesale.

The weather and the American hen had plotted to bring about the downfall of Humpty Dumpty. The warm airs of one of the mildest Winters has advanced the egg-laying season from three to four weeks. The hens have been able to get in and out of the unfrozen yards and to gather up plenty of shell material. If snow comes in the Middle West and the ground is hardened by the frost, the price of eggs is likely to ascend again. Meanwhile the arrivals are forcing cold storage eggs out of their shelter and are tempting the public.

In the week which ended last Friday there came to the City of New York 87,906 cases of eggs. As each case contains 360 eggs the total receipts amounted to 31,646,160 eggs, which, had they all been consumed in New York, would have given one a day to every man, woman and child. The wholesale price of eggs of the first quality closed last week at 46 cents a dozen. The price at wholesale for the week ended Jan. 7 was from 69 to 70 cents a dozen. G. R. Byrd, Secretary of the Department of Markets, said he had no doubt there would be marked decreases in egg prices and suggested that the people of New York would find it much to their advantage to substitute eggs frequently for meat.

Despite the fact that the dairy interests of the whole country have been in a state of upheaval, butter has been getting down in price to something like a normal basis. When it was selling for 80 cents earlier in the Winter many thousands of persons cut it out of their bill of fare and took to substitutes. Margarine and some of the nut butters selling at from 30 to 35 cents a pound were found to fill the bill well enough. Even with butter now at 57 cents a pound, in most of the first-class stores and the public markets, many consumers are still clinging to the vegetable variety. But the ingenious methods of solidifying oil from the cottonseed and the cocoanut by industrial chemists in recent years have made economies possible without any loss of nourishment. Butter and egg merchants who promoted these laboratory outputs now have to supply them in increasing quantities.

Much "Green" Cheese.

The dispute between the dairy farmers and the wholesale dealers kept many tons of milk out of the New York markets. The supply was sent to the condenseries and the cheese factories. Vast quantities of new cheese are now being offered in consequence, at from 32 to 35 cents a pound. As it has a rather acid taste, it is not in so much demand as the seasoned product, which is now sold at from 42 to 45 cents a pound. These are record prices for American cheese, but it is predicted that before long they will begin to tumble because of the large supplies of the new cheese which are accumulating and mellowing.

The open Winter has also brought in the abundance of the seas. Fish of the finest quality and at considerably lower prices than at this time last year are now displayed in the stalls. The harbors last season were caked with ice, while this year the sea is easy of access.

Here are some fish prices by the pound of the present as compared with this time last year.

	1918. Cents.	1919. Cents.
Shrimp	30	25
Smelts	30	20
Scallops	75	60
Mackerel	28-30	20
Perch	30	25
Cod	18	15
Sea bass	25-30	24

Washington Market dealers estimate that there has been a decline of 25 per cent. in the price of fish this year, as compared with last year. Last week, halibut, which was not seen much in the market a year ago, arrived in large quantities. Red snappers are also abundant. Oysters and clams are offered at about the same prices as those which prevailed in the Winter of 1917-18. Sea food at the present prices will help to give the cost of living a downward slant.

Some Meat Prices.

The reports of the Commissioner of Markets show that on Jan. 31 choice cut rib roast brought 32 cents a pound at retail, top sirloin roast from 35 to 38 cents, sirloin steak from 38 to 50 cents, and round steak 48 cents.

Shoulder of lamb was quoted at from 22 to 25 cents a pound; lamb chops at 32 cents a pound, and legs of mutton from 25 to 28 cents, while shoulders of mutton brought from 15 to 20 cents a pound.

Pork products decreased in price. Fresh shoulder was offered at retail from 30 to 32 cents. Fresh hams at from 35 to 38 cents, and smoked hams at from 35 to 38 cents, and bacon at from 32 to 40 cents.

How sharp the upward trend has been in meats is shown in the Department of Market quotations of last Thursday, as compared with last Friday, which closed the quotations of the week.

For instance, smoked hams advanced from 35 to 40 cents; fresh shoulder of pork rose from 25 to 32 cents; sirloin steak went up 5 cents; legs of mutton, 2 cents, and shoulders of veal shifted from 22 to 25 and 28 cents.

In making comparisons of food prices there is always the factor of quality to be considered. In meats, the city-killed product is likely to be five cents more a pound than the Western killed, brought here in refrigerator cars. Eggs have many grades. The best way to arrive at any conclusion as to how far the cost of living has approached conditions as they were before the war in staple lines is to take comparisons from the reports of the United States Department of Labor. These represent investigations in leading cities of the United States and in stores which serve all classes of the communities. In the lists later presented, the average of prices in the years 1914 and 1918 are compared with prices in Washington Market at present. The last quotations represent a thorough canvass of the market. A few of the staple groceries quoted could not be obtained in the market and were priced at a leading grocery store in the next block. The table is as follows:

Three Stages of Prices.

(First two columns based on report of the United States Department of Labor, showing average of retail prices in leading cities throughout the country. The last column at Washington Market and neighborhood.)

Departing from the line of staples it will be found that poultry, including some of the fancy varieties, shows a tendency to descend, although there were slight rises last week. Fowls are quoted at 40 cents a pound, roasting chickens at 45, turkeys at 52, geese at 42, ducks at 48, and pigeons at 20 cents. It is hard to get exact prices for high-class goods of this kind. There are booths, however, in Washington Market with uptown representatives which keep down such prices by competition.

Vegetables on the Upgrade.

Although accounts have been printed of the sharp decline of vegetables, there has been a steady reaction in the last few days. The brief period of cold weather in the South last month played havoc in the truck gardens and farms, from which the bulk of the green groceries now coming to New York are sent.

Peppers are retailing at 8 cents each, as compared with the 5 cents they brought early in January. Dealers are asking from 20 to 40 cents each for cauliflower, while last month they were content with from 15 to 30 cents. Lettuce brings from 5 to 20 cents a head. Radishes, until lately 5 cents a bunch, are now 8 cents. A heart of celery is priced at 25 cents, instead of from 10 to 15 cents as formerly. Egg plant from Florida is sold for from 20 to 40 cents, instead of from 10 to 25 cents. Cranberries, which not long ago were two quarts for 25 cents, are now 30 cents a quart. String beans, only a short time ago 15 to 20 cents a quart, are being sold at 30 cents.

Mushrooms, 60 cents last month, are now 80 cents a pound. Malaga grapes, formerly 25 cents, are at present 35 cents. But strawberries, last month $1 a box, can be had now for 90 cents.

Some of the Southern products which have not risen in cost are artichokes, parsnips, spinach, and beets.

The future prices of food supplies in this country depend upon a variety of circumstances. Now that the restraining influence of the Federal Food Board has been withdrawn, the old laws of supply and demand are expected to reassert themselves. It is likely that considerable quantities of food will be forced out of storage. The coming prohibition is expected to make large supplies of grain available.

Great Britain at the present time is making a strong effort to supply herself as much as possible with provender from her colonies, such as Australia and Canada. Those who believe that there will be another high peak reached in food prices before there can be a permanent lowering of them, are counting on an extensive export trade.

The final solution of the problem of the high cost of living, in the opinion of many economists, is to be found in a stimulating of agriculture by the Government and the sending of many thousands of returned soldiers to farms.

RUSSIANS TAUGHT TO USE TRACTORS

WHEN George F. Hummel, educational director of the east side branch of the Y. M. C. A., organized a tank parade through New York streets to stimulate recruiting he did not foresee that it would stimulate Russian agriculture, too; but today, with peace in sight, the agricultural stimulation is still in evidence on the east side.

For peasant Russian immigrants found in the tanks the possibilities of farm tractors, and there are now four groups, consisting of ten men to a group, learning how to run and manage a tractor. When the course started it was discovered that among the men who were most anxious to fit themselves were some who could not afford to pay the tuition fees. The matter was brought before Ambassador Bakhmeteff, and he offered a scholarship of the course to twenty men who could not afford to pay for it either because they were married or were out of employment.

Not even with this were all the problems solved. The Y. M. C. A. had capable American teachers who could teach the subject to men who spoke their own tongue; the Y. M. C. A. had among its directors men who could speak Russian and who could talk about the political problems of the country, but the Y. M. C. A. had no men who could both speak English and Russian and who had the additional gift of being able to differentiate between a bolt and a screw. So Mr. Hummel discovered a well educated Russian engineer who was willing to have the course taught him and then to take on the duties of assistant teacher to the man who was an expert on the subject.

The course is given in an old two-story stable on East Eighty-second Street. The building has been cleaned and fumigated and a lecture room built in. It is here that the men get their theory work of the course. Leading from that is an immense floor with seven or eight types of tractors. The actual mechanical part of the course is given here.

Mr. Hummel said that he had never seen such unfailing enthusiasm in any group of students.

"The men," he said, "sit up tense and bright-eyed all through the lecture work. Mr. Dean, the instructor, stands at the blackboard and with a bit of chalk explains the workings of the tractor engine. The Russian engineer stands near him and watches the expression on the men's faces. When the usual smiling reaction in explanation of some knot in the problem doesn't appear on the faces of the men before him, he takes the piece of chalk from Mr. Dean and explains the whole thing again in the language of the men.

"After the theory work comes the work on the engines and tractors. In preparation for the practical part of the lesson Mr. Dean usually tinkers about the engines and so manipulates things as to insure the stopping of the engine or the inability to even start it. He plugs up an exhaust pipe with a bit of cotton waste, he loosens a bolt or a valve, he puts water into the gasoline tank. The men are then brought out upon the floor and told to set the tractor going. Finally, every leak and stoppage is repaired and the men go through some new phase of mechanical repair work. All along they act like a group of children playing with some strange toy of never-ending delights. There is no doubt that all of these men are going to be capable tractor mechanics. At least 75 per cent. are doing the work in preparation for their return to Russia.

"Within the next five years America is likely to ship at least 50,000 tractors yearly to Europe. Russia will get a good many of them. The orders for them have been placed, but the conditions there and the lack of transport facilities make it impossible to do anything at present except what we are doing here. And that is not a little. Russia will have no use of her tractors without men to run them, repair them, and utilize them. The tractor is an American product. Before the Russian can learn how to use it extensively he needs somebody who has made a study of the machine to show him how. The men here are learning that."

Mr. Hummel has arranged to give all the men who complete the course a three weeks' practical training period on a farm. Here all the phases of farm tractor work will be taken up so as to enable the men to see how it can be adapted to all forms of farm labor.

Besides the Russian group, there is also a class of Czechoslovaks who are taking up the course with the same end in view.

BOLSHEVIKI ARE BUSY IN THE UNITED STATES

A Sample of Their Methods and Distortions of Fact at Washington Meeting Attended by Congressmen

The Washington meeting described in this article is the one which several Congressmen attended, thereby bringing down much criticism upon their heads on the floors of the House and Senate.

By ONE WHO WAS PRESENT.

On Thursday, Jan. 30, there appeared among the advertisements of theatrical performances in Washington the following modest announcement:

THE TRUTH ABOUT RUSSIA will be told at
POLI'S THEATRE
SUNDAY, FEB. 2, 2 P. M., by
ALBERT RHYS WILLIAMS,
War Correspondent and Author, and
LOUISE BRYANT,
Author and Lecturer, who have just returned from Russia
Judson King will preside.

Many people did not see this advertisement, but enough did, and were otherwise invited, to fill Poli's Theatre. But to none of these people did this simple advertisement bring the shock which it caused those of us who have been in Russia recently. We knew the people who were scheduled to speak, and we knew the cause for which they spoke, and we understood that an outpost of the Bolshevist propaganda army, whose cunning strategy is even better than that of the German propaganda army, with which it was sometimes connected, had, indeed, made a quick movement on the national capital, camped in Poli's Theatre, near the Treasury, and "got away with it."

The theatre was well filled at 2 o'clock, and still people were coming in. The only unoccupied seats were in the first three rows in front, which were reserved, some one said, for members of Congress. Young women and young men were politely ushering people to their seats. Other young women were selling copies of a book, "Six Red Months in Russia."

At 2:30 a murmur ran over the crowd, and a group of people appeared on the stage—Mr. King, Miss Bryant, Mr. Williams, and a man with a clerical waistcoat and a standing collar. It appeared that Mr. King was the introducer, Miss Bryant and Mr. Williams the entertainers, and the clergyman the decoration. There were three tables on the stage, each draped with the Stars and Stripes.

The meeting was opened by the introducer, and it very soon showed that he was no mean spellbinder. A "home atmosphere" had to be created, and he did it most successfully—"folks were all here to get the facts about Russia. The American people wanted to know the facts."

"I have fought in reform movements in half a dozen cities," (he named them) "and, having been an editor in Texas, with a six-shooter in the right-hand drawer of my desk, I am not exactly a fearsome man, but I remember how doubtful I was when, some years ago, a friend invited me to a meeting of Russian revolutionists (rolling the r's heavily). I found them intelligent, cultivated people; the women charming and delightful. * * * Now, these young people who are going to talk to you to-day have come from Russia. They went there, they knew what to look for, and they have come back with the facts."

"The Poor Bolshevist Government."

All this and more of the same kind, and Miss Bryant is introduced. Miss Bryant appears a demure and pretty girl, with a large hat, a stylish suit, and gray stockings. Her voice is high, but it has a plaintive note to it. She amuses the crowd, because, with the air of an ingénue, she hurls darts at Government departments, holds people up to ridicule, and with a fearful voice appeals to American fair play to be just to a beneficent Bolshevist Government and give it a chance.

The crowd does not know that she is not Miss Bryant at all, but Mrs. John Reed, wife of John Reed—an extreme radical, whose speaking and writing in America were considered several times so dangerous to the winning of the war that he was arrested and forbidden to keep on—that she shares and has shared his views, and that during her six months in Russia she was in no wise a disinterested, objective observer, but a partisan of the fiercest sort.

But "Miss Bryant" was not accurate, and when she had finished her speech she had told us nothing about Russia. We heard compliments for certain Bolshevist leaders, we heard gibes against their opponents, but we heard nothing about Russia.

She told us it was her honest opinion that the secret documents, showing Bolshevist relations with the Germans, were false, and she says she wrote Mr. Creel to that effect. She omitted to say that the documents had been passed upon, not by Mr. Creel, but by historical and Russian scholars, who, as textual critics, had thrown out the documents which they found false, and left the majority whose identity was amply proven.

"Lies are constantly told about the poor Bolshevist Government," said Miss Bryant. "For instance, Trotzky's daughter is said to take large quantities of money out of Russia." * * * "The little girl is only six years old," mischievously added Miss Bryant, "and she is a very precocious child, but, I am sure, she is not able to do that."

Omitting the Facts.

Miss Bryant leaves the matter here, as always, and does not tell the audience that in September, not Trotzky's little daughter, but the former Bolshevist Commissar of Finance, Mr. Gukovsky, did, indeed, arrive in Stockholm with a young lady and twenty-one trunks containing 60,000,000 rubles in money, and a considerable quantity of platinum, whose price is four to five times that of gold.

Miss Bryant told us that the Bolshevist Minister in Stockholm, Mr. Vorovsky, gave an American correspondent two innocent and truthful reels. But she does not tell us that Mr. Vorovsky was the head of a Bolshevist Legation in Stockholm, where from twenty to thirty persons were known to be employed, and whose sole function was the spreading of such propaganda in Sweden as would disrupt the Swedish State and destroy the Swedish Government, a Government which is a very democratic sort of constitutional monarchy, and where the Cabinet is Socialist-Liberal, and headed by the famous Swedish Socialist, Branting, who has been a partisan of the allied cause from the first.

Miss Bryant tells us about Schrader, "one of the old conservatives of Petrograd." Schrader, who was an ardent Socialist, lived out of Russia for years, and when the Bolsheviki overthrew the Constituent Assembly and violently seized the power, continued as the head of the Board of Aldermen in Petrograd to attempt to administer the city until the Bolsheviki forced him out. The Board of Aldermen, too, was elected under the new régime, and contained Socialists and Liberals, but it was not Bolshevist.

"The schools in Siberia," says Miss Bryant, "were so wonderful under the Bolsheviki. Strange, is it not, that the teachers, many of whom were Socialists, should all have been against the Bolsheviki, and that the Principal of the Girls' High School in Irkutsk should have been suspended from her department by the new Bolshevist Commissar of Education because she did not kowtow to him, and was kept at her duties contrary to this suspension by the Teachers' Soviet? There are a few Soviets, (or councils or unions,) as you please, which are not Bolshevist, but very few."

"Bolshevism," says Miss Bryant, "is not such a terrible word. It only means 'majority' in Russian."

Miss Bryant does not speak Russian, and knows nothing of the etymology of the language, but she does know that the Bolsheviki have never been in the majority in Russia; no, not since they dispersed the Constituent Assembly, which was predominately Socialist and two-thirds against them, with machine guns.

What Mr. Williams Had to Say.

Is it worth while to go further? In the storm of applause the demure little speaker sits down, and the Chairman comes forward to prepare the ground for the second speaker. But who is this young man? When we come out to hear such a big thing as "The Truth About Russia" we have a right to know what is the character and training and preparation of the man who is to tell it. Mr. Albert Rhys Williams was a minister of the gospel before he became a Socialist. Mr. Williams was an ardent Socialist when he went to Russia, but he went saying that he was also an honest American, and wished to help Russia, to prevent the masses—at least those with whom he should come in contact—from abusing their opportunity and committing excesses. He ended by becoming one of the Bolshevist organization.

Mr. Williams tells us a little more about Russia than Miss Bryant did, and the figures which he gives in one sentence do not agree with those in another. One time it is one in two thousand who have been killed in the Bolshevist revolution: again it is one in five thousand. But Mr. Williams is so eloquent, that the crowd does not notice this. To one who has followed the Bolshevist movement from its inception, and especially the Bolshevist propaganda in the United States, it was very interesting to see how Mr. Williams did not deny either the economic destruction in Russia or the violence and killing. He did not deny them—he justified them. He said that the Bolshevist revolution accomplished so much that the killing was relatively a small matter.

And he continued, referring to the war just closed, "How many more have we killed in France?" The crowd, lately so patriotic, lately so convinced of the righteousness of our war against Germany, listens with complacence, while Mr. Williams lifts the Bolshevist revolution up to a plane higher than that of the war which we have just fought. Mr. Williams deplores the sad fate of the upper classes of Russia, many of whom he admits are not only charming, but kind. He says that this was necessary in order that the Bolshevist revolution might succeed. Breshkovskaya, the "grandmother of the revolution," Mr. Williams brushes aside with a kind remark that the poor old lady is 75 years old, and her idol, Kerensky, is gone, therefore she feels bitter toward the Bolsheviki. "The Bolshevist Government of the Soviets," says Mr. Williams, "represents 90 per cent. of the people, and 10 per cent. have failed—as one side in an agreement must always fail—and 90 per cent. have won."

Bolshevist Tyranny Not Described.

We cannot help replying that nearly 90 per cent. of the Russian people are peasants (85 per cent.), and that these, having been told by the Bolsheviki to seize all the land, now have no further interest in Bolshevism. Mr. Williams did not tell us of the Bolshevist methods of sending punitive expeditions into country villages with machine guns to get food from peasants. He did not tell us how the peasants buried food and hid it in order not to give it up. He did not tell us how the peasants of the province of Nishni-Novgorod fought the Bolshevist detachments, sometimes victoriously. He did not tell us that the Russian peasant considered the Bolshevist Government a failure, because it gave him neither cloth nor tools, nor other prime necessities. He did not tell us that in many places the peasants were planting only as much as they needed for themselves, and that they were hesitating to plant on the ground which they seized from the former estate owners because they had a feeling that their title was not clear.

Mr. Williams tells us that the first ten men chosen at random out of any of the 5,000 Soviets in Russia are equal or superior to the first ten men chosen out of any university club in America in political and economic education. The most favorable figure we have yet seen for the literacy in the Russian Army was about 50 per cent. For the whole population the figure would be much less. No one who loves the Russian people makes fun of its lack of literacy, for which this people is not to blame; but we are doing the Russian people poor justice to compare them for the sake of exaggeration with college-trained men in America. Such a statement shows pretty well what kind of "truth about Russia" we may expect from some "observers."

Mr. Williams says that the people rose in their might, put down the Czar, and killed the impostor Rasputin. He forgets that Rasputin was killed some months before he arrived in Russia and by men of the Russian nobility in the house of a prominent and wealthy Russian nobleman, Prince Yusupov.

Then Mr. Williams says: "The Bolsheviki have abolished capital punishment." How about the 500 persons who were executed without trial by order of the Extraordinary Committee for Combating Counter Revolution—an execution which is not denied but justified in a letter from the Bolshevist Minister of Foreign Affairs, Chicherin, to Major Wardwell of the Red Cross? It is the same old thing—the difference between theory on paper and practice in life.

Forgetful of Starving Peasants.

Again, Mr. Williams tells of uniform pay and better and larger production in the factories under Bolshevist management. A little later he admits that on the contrary the conditions in the factory and in all industrial life are terrible, but says it is unfair to expect anything else. Both of these statements cannot be true. Let us have one or the other. As a matter of fact, most of the factories are shut down for lack of raw materials. The discipline and efficiency of management in many others under workmen's control were very poor, and in those few factories which continued to run up to Sept. 1 there was real co-operation between the former proprietors and the workmen, and the Bolsheviki kept their hands off. The workmen of Russia, who represent, perhaps, 7 per cent. of the population, are no longer behind the Bolshevist movement, and most of them are starving.

And again Mr. Williams says: "Russia found herself with a minimum of slaughter." Those of us who have seen Russia recently cannot call her condition "finding herself" by any possible stretch of the imagination. There is neither economic nor spiritual equilibrium in that tortured country.

The meeting was over, the promised question box did not take place. At least, only one or two questions were answered. There was no time for more. Two everyday Americans coming out the door were talking. One said: "What do you think of it?" The other replied: "Pretty good, pretty good." A naval officer's wife came out, and some one asked: "How did you like it?" "It was just thrilling," she said.

To us who have been in Russia, who have seen the old tyranny, the real revolution of March, 1917, the painful effort for democracy which failed, and the new tyranny of the Bolsheviki which followed; to us who have been not with one class, but with all classes of the Russian people, from the palace of the Czar to the Izba or cottage of the peasant; to us who have seen violent hands laid on that most delicate of all mechanism, human society; who have seen everything round about us, freedom, order, education, industry, home life—all this smashed throughout an entire great country in the name of a great boon to be conferred upon mankind—to us this meeting seems neither "pretty good" nor "thrilling."

Let us have the facts. This meeting did not give us the facts about Russia at all. It was not meant to.

A MASCULINE GROUCH

A very clever, timely, and convincing cartoon which lately appeared on a page of your admirably edited Public Ledger interested me so much that I wish to give expression on paper and publicity to the train of thought it suggested.

The cartoon represented two women at a "sale," and one on each side of a narrow aisle through which a belated specimen of the male sex is awaiting some change of position on the part of the "bargain hunters" to pass on his way, but his intent and wish are frustrated and somewhat contemptuously ignored by the two women, who are so engrossed in examining the fabrics offered at a "reduced price" that they have neither eyes to see nor ears to hear anything or any one else.

Now is not this an instance of what takes place every day in all our dry-goods stores, at railway stations and at "ticket" windows of the theatres? And, moreover, is it not true, absolutely, that the average drummer or traveler dreads the presence of one woman more than of four men in the line before him of those awaiting their turn to purchase a ticket?

And is not her presence equally abhorred at the ticket window of a theatre? Is it, moreover, an exaggeration to say that "curses not loud but deep" jostle each other for expression on the lips of the tolerant male would-be ticket purchasers, who regard with ill-concealed rage her scanning of the theatre plan of seats? Take the familiar sight of a woman holding a child by the hand on a sidewalk. Does she draw the youngster toward her that an anxious, perspiring wayfarer in the rear may pass on? Not she. She prefers to hold the kid at arm's length, so that the despised male may have to step in the gutter, maybe, to pass her by.

These are very common instances of feminine obtuseness or selfishness, call it what you will, on daily exhibition in almost every department of town and even country life. I could multiply illustrations of women's inconsiderate conduct to the filling of columns of The Public Ledger. The undersigned may and will appear to many as one holding obsolete ideas, odd and old-fashioned opinions; but what I have said, as well as what I hold and believe, is supported by long and rather sad experience. Moreover, in addition, I am honest enough to confess that I do not regard with unmixed satisfaction the modern, revolutionary changes in the sphere of woman's occupations and attire. I am one of many who believe that woman is physically unfit for many occupations she now assumes—the running of elevators, the driving of teams of horses, the felling of huge trees, the plowing of heavy fields. God and nature never constituted her delicate frame and organism for work of this kind, requiring the strength and hardihood of male operatives.

Neither do I prefer, as being more becoming or healthful, the female fashions of today over those of half a century ago. Who, of any taste, would prefer, for instance, the tight-fitting "hobble skirt" of the present with the now much underestimated and disliked crinoline of grandmother's day, whose wearer was wont to glide rather than walk through city street and country highway with all the grace and buoyancy of a floating balloon?—Guy McSwiggan in Philadelphia Public Ledger.

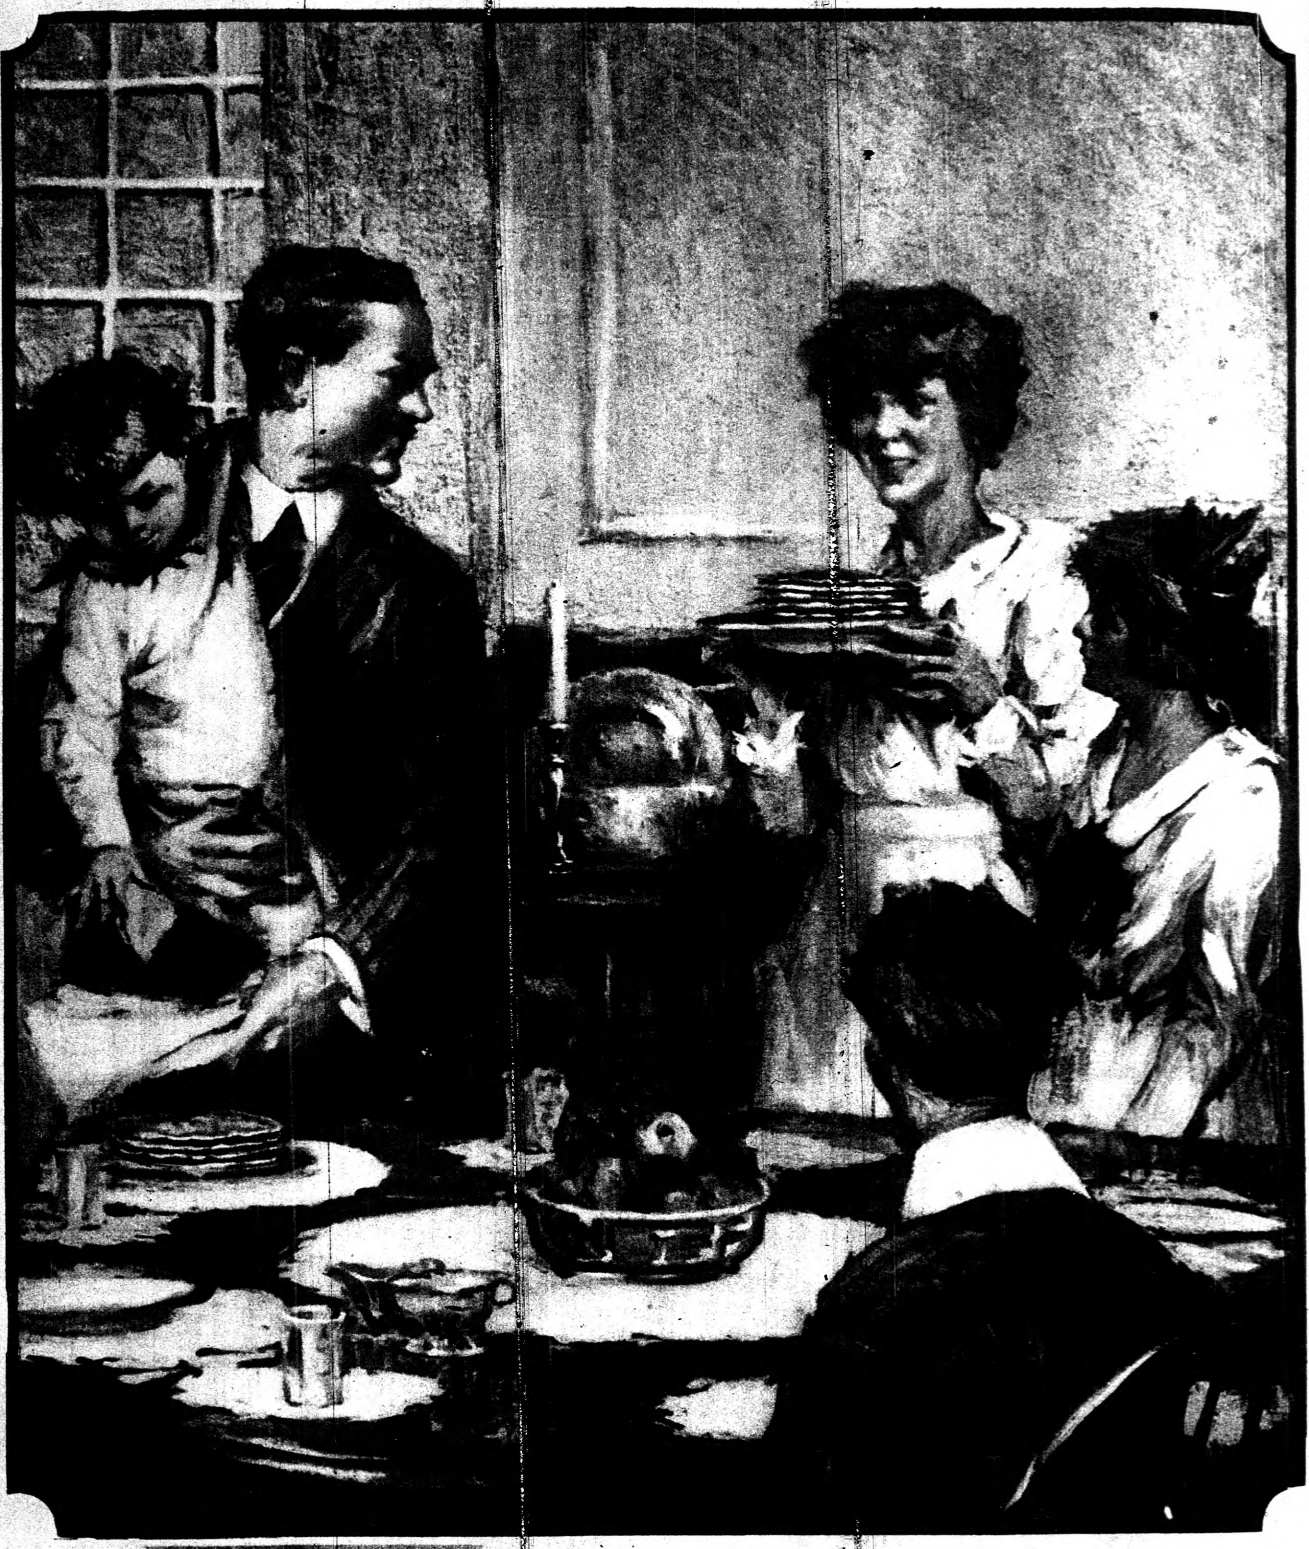
The favorite breakfast of every member of the family



Father loves it—and as for the children————!

FATHER says he prefers a hot plate of Aunt Jemima Pancakes to any other breakfast. He says that on the days he has pancakes he doesn't seem to get so hungry along towards noon. And breakfast always seems to be on time on pancake days.

The children—well, they don't know just why but they certainly do like them!

Mother says they're so easy! And so economical!

Mother likes to have Aunt Jemima Pancakes for breakfast because everyone else enjoys them so much. Even Father's paper is cast aside—that can wait till he's on the car!

And Aunt Jemima Pancakes are so wonderfully easy to make—it's no trouble at all to mix up the flour with a little water—the cakes are done before she has fairly begun!

She knows, too, how good they are for the children.

As for economy—an Aunt Jemima breakfast for the whole family costs only a few cents!

Have Aunt Jemima Pancakes tomorrow!

HAPPINESS

Concerning the Three Wishes, Wealth, Health and Happiness.

If you could pledge your baby's future with one of these three, would you choose wisely?

La-May Face Powder Is Pure!

—No White Lead—No Rice Powder—
It Really Stays On Unusually Well

Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to get a face powder to stay on longer than it takes to put it on. You powder your nose nicely and the first gust of wind or the first puff of your handkerchief and away goes the powder, leaving your nose red, shiny and conspicuous, probably just at the very moment when you would give anything to appear at your best. A specialist has at last perfected a pure powder that women say stays on wonderfully well. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stay on. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores and unsightly complexions. This improved formula contains a medicinal powder doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and irritations. It is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Amé). Because it is pure and because it stays on so well, it is already sold everywhere. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it is now used by over a million American women.

"Nothing so freshens my skin as my bedtime massage with Pond's Cold Cream"

Frances Starr

FRANCES STARR says, "I love the way Pond's Vanishing Cream makes my skin look—so soft and clear, yet not the least bit shiny"

POSED ESPECIALLY BY FRANCES STARR FOR THE POND'S EXTRACT CO.

In winter your skin needs added protection-

DO you know why it is that in winter your skin is so often rough, dry and "tight"? The reason, as Dr. William Allen Pusey points out, is that "the skin because of the unnatural dryness loses its power of resistance." It cracks and breaks, becomes painfully rough and red. Dr. Pusey goes on to say that the secret in preventing and curing chapped skin is by outward application to make up for the oil which the skin is failing to supply for itself.

The invisible protection your skin needs

Just before you go out, apply a little Pond's Vanishing Cream. It provides just the protection your skin needs to keep it soft, fine-textured and lovely the winter through.

Use it on your hands and face. Instantly it is absorbed by the skin, leaving not the slightest trace of shine. Notice the soft, velvety texture--the transparent, natural coloring it gives the skin.

Use it every day. Do not be afraid to apply it while dressing. It disappears immediately and will not leave a trace on your veil or gloves.

Whenever you want your skin to look its best

Before going out in the evening, or whenever you want your skin to look particularly well, apply a little Pond's Vanishing Cream. It seems actually to smooth out all the tired lines. Your face feels and looks wonderfully refreshed. You will be astonished to see that your skin has gained the transparency and softness everyone so much admires.

Many women say that Pond's Vanishing Cream is such a good powder base that, after using it, one powdering is enough for a whole evening.

Beautiful women of the stage who realize the necessity of keeping their skin always smooth, lovely, free from chapping, use Pond's Vanishing Cream regularly. Among the many famous actresses who use it are Billie Burke, Norma Talmadge, Hazel Dawn, Martha Hedman, Frances Starr, Mabel Taliaferro, Marion Davies, Marjorie Rambeau and others.

Your skin must also be thoroughly cleansed at night

But to keep your skin clear and fresh-looking it must also be thoroughly cleansed at night.

For your bedtime cleansing and massage tonight, try Pond's Cold Cream. This cream is an oil cream and is intended just for cleansing and massage. It has the creamy, "workable" consistency demanded by professional masseurs.

Neither Pond's Cold Cream nor Pond's Vanishing Cream will grow hair or down. You can secure these creams at drug and department stores everywhere.

TRAINED men were withdrawn from every line to put the country on a war basis, and the re-adjustment will necessarily be a long one. The seed trade has been no exception to the rule; hence we urge our customers to send in their orders at once, before the Spring rush begins. It will be a vast help to us in doing our part in feeding the country to be able to execute orders in February that in ordinary times come to us in March and April. So, whether you buy from us or any other seed house, send in your orders early.

Peter Henderson

"Better Gardens"

AMERICAN food in vast quantities must continue to go to Europe. The home garden, whether in the city or the town, or on the farm, is of most vital importance to the country. Your garden will help in our country's great work for humanity; and it will cut in two the cost of your table. For years Peter Henderson & Co. have urged the planting of more gardens because of the obvious economy, but now there is an added appeal that cannot be disregarded. The need for more gardens and better gardens is greater than ever.

Make your home garden a better garden this year by the most intelligent use of the space you have---not only by using better methods but by planting seeds of known quality. The initial cost of the seeds that you plant is one of the smallest items, but it is the most important, and you cannot get the fullest results unless you have started right.

Henderson's seeds are tested seeds. Many of the methods of seed testing in use today originated with the founder of our firm and these have been improved from year to year. Our seventy-two years of success in our business of seed raising, testing, and selling has given an unequalled experience that is back of every packet or package of seed we sell.

"Everything for the Garden" is the title of our 1919 catalogue. It is really a book of 184 pages, with 8 colored pages, and over 1,000 halftones, all from actual photographs showing actual results without exaggeration. It is a library of everything worth while, either in farm, garden or home.

A Remarkable Offer of Henderson's Seed Specialties

To demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds we have made up a Henderson Collection, consisting of one packet each of the following six great specialties:

Ponderosa Tomato
Big Boston Lettuce
White Tipped Scarlet Radish
Henderson's Invincible Asters
Henderson's Brilliant Mixture Poppies
Spencer Mammoth Waved Sweet Peas

To obtain the largest possible distribution for our annual catalogue "Everything for the Garden," we make the following unusual offer: Mail us 10c and we will send you the catalogue, together with this remarkable "Henderson Specialty Collection," and complete cultural directions.

Peter Henderson & Co.,
35-37 Cortlandt St., New York City.

I enclose herewith 10c for which send catalogue and "Henderson's Specialty Collection" with complete cultural directions, as advertised in The N. Y. T.

How the Homecoming Soldier Likes His Welcome

On the Surface All Goes Well, but There Has Been a Relaxation of the Sympathy and Help Which He Needs as Much as Ever

By EDITH DAY ROBINSON.

"I NEVER want to cross that ocean [illegible] sent to France," drawled a six-foot Western farmer, supporting himself on one leg and two crutches. "If I hadn't a' been sent to Paris, I never'd a' seen New York!"

His nonchalance was characteristic of the service man returned from the war.

But when all is said—praise of the service clubs and canteens, charming appreciation of home hospitality, beguiling compliments to American women—what do they really think, these soldiers returned from the war? How does home look to them, how do their people appear to them, after an exprience which those of us who have stayed behind can never accurately visualize?

Here are a few leaves, picked up in passing, that have fluttered from the books of their hearts. The sentiments vary, according to individual temperaments and experiences. But as nearly as it is possible to obtain these viewpoints — unglossed by superficial flattery—they are genuine. Joy at getting home is the prevailing mood, tempered, as the case may be, by the industrial outlook or the physical handicap.

That every demonstration of welcome had been noted, catalogued according to its value in youthful eyes, and appreciated, was plain the other night when four young soldiers lined up in front of the desk at one of the canteens.

"Just in this morning? Did they give you any kind of a welcome?" were the haphazard questions asked to give the sociable ball an impetus.

"Did they!" was the chorused answer. "Whistles tootin', a big crowd of Red Cross workers on the dock wavin' flags, ready with cigarettes and candy the minute we landed! Oh, boy!"

One youngster summed up, under cover of his companions' rapid-fire chatter, what the welcomers said to them.

"They said," he drawled softly, with the expression of a kid caught in the jam pots, mischievous, half-abashed—"God bless you—an'—an'—"

"—all that sort of thing!" I laughed, finishing it for him.

"Uh-huh!" he responded.

A boy who lives at Service Club 1, Harvard Unit—he belonged to the First Hundred Thousand, wears the gold star inside two V-shaped gold bars on his sleeve, has been wounded and gassed, and before the big adventure dwelt in San Francisco—had this to say:

"Of course I don't know anything about the other cities because I haven't had opportunity to get further than New York. But of this old town's hospitality to the men returned from France, I can't say enough! Here is an illustration of what one couple is doing: One night every week they give a big party for returned soldiers, most of whom are invited through the War Camp Community Service. They invite attracttive girls to meet the men. There is dinner and dancing afterward. One night recently they gave a special party, twenty-five girls and twenty-five fellows. There was dinner at a hotel, then we all went on to the theatre. Wh[illegible] a line of special taxis waiting for everybody. Some of the boys came from Pelham, others from away up in the Bronx. The taxis took them to whatever place they called home. And we meet the same spirit every way we turn here, though it can't always be expressed on the same big scale. The scale doesn't matter, though, what counts is the fact that they care enough to treat us as they do."

Something was said later on about interest in what the boys had experienced abroad. Here the soldier dropped a hint: "Don't you know that what we want to do is to forget what we experienced abroad? Don't you know that we dream about it every night? That's one of the difficult things about coming home, at first. Everybody asks you about it, and you can't forget!"

Many comments have been passed on the visible loosening up of military observance, since the signing of the armistice. Observations made, regarding the salute, have not been on the head of the noncom! One is grateful to note a regular officer toward whom an anxious-eyed private approaches, for the latter is pretty sure of an acknowledgment of his snappy little salute. The regular does not wear his uniform, as a rule, and leave behind him the manners that are understood to go with that uniform. His etiquette is as automatic as his pistol.

It was a joy to discover that one boy had ideas on the subject, and that he did not care who knew it. To a letter addressed to the editor of The Right About, he signed his full name, rank—that of Corporal—his residence in the hospital as to ward and floor. The communication follows:

"I am taking this opportunity to address a query to some one 'higher up.'

"When I arrived from France on the Northern Pacific I was assigned to Debarkation Hospital 3, Greenhut Building, and have been out on the streets of New York many times since. At first I was very careful to salute every officer I met, but was met with a half-salute, a 'cigarette salute,' or, as was the case many times, no salute at all.

"It is on this question that I am writing you. Has the old snappy American salute been dropped? If so, there are many of us yet ignorant of the fact. If the words of General Pershing relative to keeping up the discipline of the army have been discounted, and the salute is no longer required, is it not a matter of courtesy for an officer to return a salute in the same spirit and manner that it is given?"

The hymn of praise at being home again, the gratitude for courtesies received, the fervid appreciation of boys who have been fortunate in making many friends on their arrival, represent the brighter side. Then there are angles from the more analytic standpoint, as seen by those who have been home long enough to take deliberate stock of

How I Improved My Memory In One Evening

The Amazing Experience of Victor Jones

"Of course I place you! Mr. Addison Sims of Seattle.

"If I remember correctly—and I do remember correctly—Mr. Burroughs, the lumberman, introduced me to you at the luncheon of the Seattle Rotary Club three years ago in May. This is a pleasure, indeed! I haven't laid eyes on you since that day. How is the grain business? And how did that amalgamation work out?"

The assurance of this speaker—in the crowded corridor of the Hotel McAlpin—compelled me to turn and look at him, though I must say it is not my usual habit to "listen in" even in a hotel lobby.

"He is David M. Roth, one of the most famous memory experts in the United States," said my friend Kennedy, answering my question before I could get it out. "He will show you a lot more wonderful things than that, before the evening is over."

And he did.

As we went into the banquet room the toastmaster was introducing a long list of the guests to Mr. Roth. I got in line and when it came my turn, Mr. Roth asked, "What are your initials, Mr. Jones, and your business connection and telephone number?" Why he asked this, I learned later, when he picked out from the crowd the 60 men he had met two hours before and called each by name without a mistake. What is more, he named each man's business and telephone number, for good measure.

I won't tell you all the other amazing things this man did except to tell how he called back, without a minute's hesitation, long lists of numbers, bank clearings, prices, lot numbers, parcel post rates and anything else the guests gave him in rapid order.

When I met Mr. Roth again—which you may be sure I did the first chance I got—he rather bowled me over by saying, in his quiet, modest way:

"There is nothing miraculous about my remembering anything I want to remember, whether it be names, faces, figures, facts or something I have read in a magazine.

"You can do this just as easily as I do. Anyone with an average mind can learn quickly to do exactly the same things which seem so miraculous when I do them.

"My own memory," continued Mr. Roth, "was originally very faulty. Yes it was—a really poor memory. On meeting a man I would lose his name in thirty seconds, while now there are thousands of men and women in the United States, many of whom I have met but once, the names of a large number of whom I can call on meeting them."

"That is all right for you, Mr. Roth," I interrupted, "you have given years to it. But how about me?"

"Mr. Jones," he replied, "I can teach you the method of obtaining a good memory in one evening. This is not a guess, because I have done it with many pupils. In the first of seven simple lessons which I have prepared for home study, I show you the basic principle of my whole system and you will find it—not hard work as you might fear—but just like playing a fascinating game. I will prove it to you."

He didn't have to prove it. His Course did; I got it the very next day from his publishers, the Independent Corporation.

When I tackled the first lesson, I suppose I was the most surprised man in forty-eight States to find that I had learned in about one hour how to remember a list of one hundred words so that I could call them off forward and back without a single mistake.

That first lesson stuck. And so did the other six.

Read this letter from Terence J. McManus, of the firm of Olcott, Bonynge, McManus & Ernst, Attorneys and Councellors at Law, 170 Broadway, and one of the most famous trial lawyers in New York:

> "May I take occasion to state that I regard your service in giving this system to the world as a public benefaction? The wonderful simplicity of the method, and the ease with which its principles may be acquired, especially appeal to me. I may add that I already had occasion to test the effectiveness of the first two lessons in the preparation for trial of an important action in which I am about to engage."

Mr. McManus didn't put it a bit too strong. The Roth Course is priceless to me. I can absolutely count on my memory now. I can call the name of most any man I have met before—and I am getting better all the time. I can remember figures I wish to remember. Telephone numbers come to mind instantly, once I have filed them by Mr. Roth's easy method. Street addresses are just as easy.

The old fear of forgetting (you know what that is) has vanished. I used to be "scared stiff" on my feet because I wasn't sure. I couldn't remember what I wanted to say.

Now I am sure of myself, and confident, and "easy as an old shoe" when I get on my feet at the club, or at a banquet, or in a business meeting, or in any social gathering.

Perhaps the most enjoyable part of it all is that I have become a good conversationalist—and I used to be as silent as a sphinx when I got into a crowd of people who knew things.

Now I can call up most any fact I want right at the time I need it most. I used to think a "hair trigger" memory belonged only to the prodigy and genius. Now I see that nearly every man of us has that kind of a memory if he only knows how to make it work right.

I tell you it is a wonderful thing, after groping around in the dark for so many years to be able to switch the big searchlight on your mind and see most everything you want to remember.

This Roth Course will do wonders in your office.

Since we took it up you never hear anyone in our office say "I guess" or "I think it was about so much" or "I forget that right now" or "I can't remember," or "I must look up his name." Now they are right there with the answer.

Have you ever heard of "Multigraph" Smith? Real name H. Q. Smith, Division Manager of the Multigraph Sales Company, Ltd., in Montreal. Here is just a bit from a letter of his that I saw last week:

> "Here is the whole thing in a nutshell: Mr. Roth has a most remarkable Memory Course. It is simple, and easy as falling off a log. Yet with one hour a day of practice, anyone—I don't care who he is—can improve his Memory."

My advice to you is don't wait another minute. Send to Independent Corporation for Mr. Roth's amazing course and see what a wonderful memory you have got. Your dividends in increased power will be enormous.

While Mr. Jones has chosen the story form for this account of his experience and that of others with the Roth Memory Course, he has used only facts that are known personally to the President of the Independent Corporation, who hereby verifies the accuracy of Mr. Jones' story in all its particulars.

"Of Course I Place You! Mr. Addison Sims of Seattle"

The Amazing Memory Feats of David M. Roth

The Seattle Post Intelligencer said:

"Of the 150 members of the Seattle Rotary Club at a luncheon yesterday, not one left with the slight st doubt that Mr. Roth could do all claimed for him. Rotarians at the meeting had to pinch themselves to see whether they were awake or not.

"Mr. Roth started his exhibition by asking sixty of those present to introduce themselves by name to him. Then he waved them aside and instructed a member at a blackboard to write down names of firms, sentences, and mottoes on numbered squares, meanwhile sitting with his back to the writer and only learning the positions by oral report. After this he was asked by different Rotarians to tell what was written down in various specific squares and gave the entire list without a mistake.

"After finishing with this Mr. Roth singled out and called by name the sixty men to whom he had been introduced earlier, who in the meantime had changed seats and had mixed with others present."

aspects, with whom the first wild thrill of return has passed. A friend of the writer was dancing at one of the officers' clubs the other night. She asked her partner what he thought of the people of his home city after his months away.

"Do you want a frank answer?" he asked, "or the usual thing?" She told him she wanted a frank answer. "Well," he said, "I'd like to go back for a little while where they understand. They don't here—and it jars like the dickens sometimes! That's all!"

As far as could be learned, he did not offer a key to the remark, which to some may remain cryptic and to others be quite clear. Apropos of it, there comes to mind the reply of a young woman who was asked why she did not invite a certain service man to come and see her, since it was evident the invitation would have given him pleasure and inasmuch as she had had more opportunity to size him up than is often possible on meeting strangers in private houses. She said it was impossible, as she did not know who he, or his family, was! Then there is the woman who listens thrilled to the account of the boy's experience in Belleau Wood, Soissons, La Ferte, who later remarks: "Isn't he wonderful! Such a fine, big, simple-minded fellow! Isn't it too bad he hasn't a better education!"

Could it have been part and parcel of any of this sort of thing the officer meant when he said: "You don't understand over here!"?

"It's a fine country to get back to," said a little chap, grinning cheerily in the ward of one of the debarkation hospitals. "But over here they don't know there's been a war! They think they do, and they talk about it, and they've worked fine for it. But they don't know much about it!"

© Brown Brothers.

Home at Last!

An unusual young woman, by reason of keen discernments and courage of her convictions, has been occupying a position in which she has been in daily touch with boys from the various debarkation hospitals. She was asked to sketch her impression of how they felt about things in general.

"There is a strong undercurrent of restlessness everywhere, and it 'got them,'" she said. "They are abnormally sensitive, of course, and they feel it—even if they don't always analyze it—as soon as they arrive. With some it takes too firm a hold. Others can shake it off. It is unfortunate in any case. They have been through everything, seen everything, experienced everything. Naturally, having given what they have given and come back more or less disabled, they have a right to feel they should be able to stop a minute and draw a long breath. But not a bit of it! All the boys who have made the supreme sacrifice are turning to their people and their country for the things they must have. And the country doesn't seem to be ready with anything tangible for them to take hold of."

"Then you do think they are feeling a letdown?"

"I know it. Some of them are so keyed up that they don't realize it yet. Part of the public has gone with them, in spirit, on their journey. But the majority of the people really have not. And the pressure of public interest, since the armistice was signed, is lowering with those who have been stimulated by descriptions of the war and its significance, but who, as I say, really have not been with the boys in spirit abroad. 'The war is over,' some of them say. 'I don't need to do any more.' Others who are continuing volunteer service are changing. They are not putting that extra effort toward improving conditions that makes accomplishment count.

"New York has never been so filled with boys who are returning from their service abroad, or who tried to serve abroad, as now. And if we have meant what we said about 'getting behind them,' we certainly won't lessen our endeavors now, or leave our job unfinished. They finished theirs. If the pressure of personal interest is not kept high, how can they fail to feel it ultimately? How can they, coming back, finding an ever-lessening enthusiasm, work themselves up to the things they must do?"

At the office of the Canteen Division of the National League for Women's Service it was stated last week that there was no difficulty in getting volunteers to work for wounded soldiers, but that there was an increasing difficulty in getting volunteers to stay on the old canteen jobs in the general interests of the rank and file.

"Since the signing of the armistice," one of those in charge said, "the ardor of the women volunteer canteen workers has been greatly dampened. Prior to that event they were dependable, reliable and willing workers, but now they have the erroneous idea that there is no reason for working long hours and at times inconvenient to them. With the continual influx of troops from overseas and with the development of canteens here, the work has increased manifold. The canteens are now always filled to capacity, yet if the weather is bad or social engagements interfere the women fail to report for service at their scheduled time."

As evidence that the canteen service is one relied upon by the men, whether returned soldiers or men stationed about the city, 28,000 men were fed at the Harvard Canteen during December in a room which accommodates about a hundred men at a time. Every once in a while a man is seen in "civies." He has presented his discharge papers at the desk before eating. "We don't want them to feel that the minute they step into civilian's clothes we're going to turn our backs on them," was the succinct explanation of Miss Alice Hemmens, manager of the canteen, who, with Mrs. Donn Barber, has been responsible for its phenomenal success. It was she who asked the men she knew to send any information concerning positions to the canteen. One of the first applicants was a man who wanted a Southern boy, discharged soldier or sailor, to learn the wholesale butter and egg business. One was immediately sent to him from Texas and started on a salary of $20 a week.

Speaking of the suggested possibility that some of the organized social work for men in the service, and just out of service, might soon terminate, a winner of the Croix de Guerre said: "I hope they won't stop. I hope they'll 'carry on' as long as the boys are here; not only for the sake of the fellows in Europe who have still to come home, but for the sake of the men who had to stay in uniform on this side of the Atlantic. They helped win the war, though they may not think so. The knowledge that they were behind the 1918 advance of the Allies—just pawing the air to get over—played its big part in making an impression on the Germans."

The Blue Tag—A Tale of British Heroism

THIS story was told to a Red Cross searcher by one of the young Americans who did not wait for his own Government to declare war, but went as volunteer back in 1914. He had been through the first gas attack at Ypres and was one of the few who came alive through that murderous yellow cloud.

"I have seen the Yser when you could cross it dryshod on bodies," he said. "I have seen such deeds of heroism in action as make any story of old-time prowess seem tame. But there's one thing I saw, not in action, that chokes me up every time I think of it.

"There were two British lads in the regiment next to us, two brothers. They were both fine fellows, but the older one was just about the finest chap I ever knew. They had both loved the same girl back home, it seems, and there had been a pretty hot rivalry between them. Well, just before they were sent out she decided for the younger one. The other took it like a man, of course. But any one could tell he was desperately hard hit. We always knew from the way he fought when his brother had had a letter.

"They both got hit in the same action. There was a system then, (and maybe now, for all I know,) of tagging the men for Blighty with a blue tag, let's say. (I think it was blue, but it doesn't matter.) Of course, only the [illegible] were sent across the Channel, only the men who were thought too bad to pull through without the very best of care. It was the older brother who got the Blighty. His brother, who lay next him at the casualty clearing station, was tagged to go to a hospital in France. During the night, while his brother slept, the older one changed the tags. The younger brother went home and married the girl during his convalescence. The older one died before they could rectify the mistake."

PARIS ONCE MORE THE GAYEST CITY

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON

PARIS, Jan. 10.

NOTHING amuses me more in Paris than the envious letters of my friends. Misled by the perspective of history, which lends glamour, and, it is safe to say, many fictitious incidents, they infer that "living in history," being "present at the greatest historic event since the Congress of Vienna," means a series of brilliant pictures peopled by famous personages as picturesque as they may possibly appear after emerging from the creative imaginations of gifted historians some fifty years hence.

Alas, for romance, (and for the anxious correspondent,) nothing could be further from the truth. The congress is composed for the most part of elderly gentlemen, very much afraid of taking cold, who travel to and from the Quai d'Orsay in closed limousines to avoid being drenched to the skin. For it rains morning, noon, and night in Paris. The sky is gray, the streets are gray, the Seine is gray. If the Seine overflows the bridges these august gentlemen will be obliged to cross the swift torrent in boats, which will be neither dignified nor comfortable. Perhaps they would adjourn to Nice—to the great rejoicing of the correspondents who are suffering the maximum discomforts of Paris for the minimum of news they manage to corkscrew out of the delegates.

Nor is the meeting of this great and portentous congress to be made the occasion for a brilliant series of social functions. As each of the delegates arrived he was given a dinner and reception by his Ambassador, a public reception at the Hôtel de Ville, and a luncheon at the Elysée. That ended it. In London, if the congress were held there, it would be quite different, and in brilliancy would eclipse anything in history. The British, generous and extravagant, entertain automatically, and in spite of short rations—they are far worse off than the French—would regard it as a matter of noblesse oblige to give this supreme "historic event" the setting it deserves.

It is interesting to note the opposite attitudes Paris and London have taken socially since the war began. It has been almost a religion with the British women to keep up a gay round of pleasure for the officers home on leave. Ten to one they would never come home again; crowd their idle hours with all the gayety, pleasure, happiness possible.

Paris, the light, the frivolous, (to the one-eyed outsider,) closed up like a tomb. The girls and young married women would not even dance with the lonesome American officers (who were driven to waltzing or turkey-trotting with one another) lest their own men might even then be in the death agony.

The natural consequence is that England is running along quite normally, and France, since the day of the armistice, has gone dancing mad. It must be remembered that when the war broke out there was the usual crop of young girls just out the Winter before or about to make their début the coming season. Down went the social lid, off went all the young men to the front, and almost without exception these girls of the noblesse and the grande bourgeoisie went into the hardest kind of war work.

Now has come the tremendous reaction. It may be that Englishwomen have formed the habit of work, but the French girls, at least, never wish to hear of it again. They want the long-withheld rights of their youth; they want to play and dance; above all, they want to marry. The last is to be a difficult proposition, for 1,800,000 Frenchmen lie under the field of honor, some 2,000,000 are mutilated, and 1,000,000 are tubercular. Although some 10,000 of our soldiers have married French girls, I cannot learn that a single American officer has succumbed.

Of course, this determination to enjoy life once more means a constant round of private entertaining, simple as it may be; but the opera, at least, is making a desperate bid for some of the old external brilliancy.

When the King of Italy arrived in December a friend of mine was asked to the reception at the Italian Embassy on the following evening. That meant a tiara, and all her jewels had been sent south during the bombing and the Berthering. She went to one of the jewelers in the Rue de la Paix and asked if he could lend her a tiara for the occasion. He threw up his hands in amazement. "But, Madame la Marquise, we have not made a tiara for years. There has been no demand."

She went to the Opera House to buy her season tickets, and happened to meet the manager. "No jewels, I suppose?" she asked. "It will still be de rigeur to be very simple."

He, too, threw up his hands, but in despair, in entreaty. "But, no, I beg of you, Madame la Marquise. Please wear all your jewels. Ask your friends to do likewise. Let us have the most brilliant season ever known. The women of Berlin are simply gorgeous at the opera. Shall Paris, Paris, for centuries the Queen of Fashion, play second fiddle to the vulgar capital of the boche?"

So all the women have sent south for their jewels. A tiara means far more in French society (where jewels are inherited and a sort of insignia) than can be appreciated by even the wealthy in a new country like the United States.

I have another friend, belonging to the bourgeoisie, whose fortune was hit hard by the war. She still has her house, but long since gave up her car and extra servants. During the war, although she worked unceasingly in private oeuvres and for the Government, she managed to receive her friends as usual on Thursdays, giving them the slim refreshments everywhere in vogue. "Now," she told me when I met her again in December, "I must make every sacrifice to give my friends a sumptuous tea. So many tremendous fortunes have been made in my class during the war, and they only waited for the fighting to stop to indulge in every extravagance. I went to one of their receptions the other day and the spread they had was unbelievable when one thinks of the scarcity of sugar and 4 francs for an apple big enough for a tart!"

It sounded tragic, but as I did not look very sympathetic, remarking, in fact, that I'd do as I pleased, and let them stay at home if all they came for was food, she said plaintively:

"Ah, you don't understand! If I fell behind I should fall out. One must do what the other does in society. We are very conventional."

"But you are an economical race," I ventured.

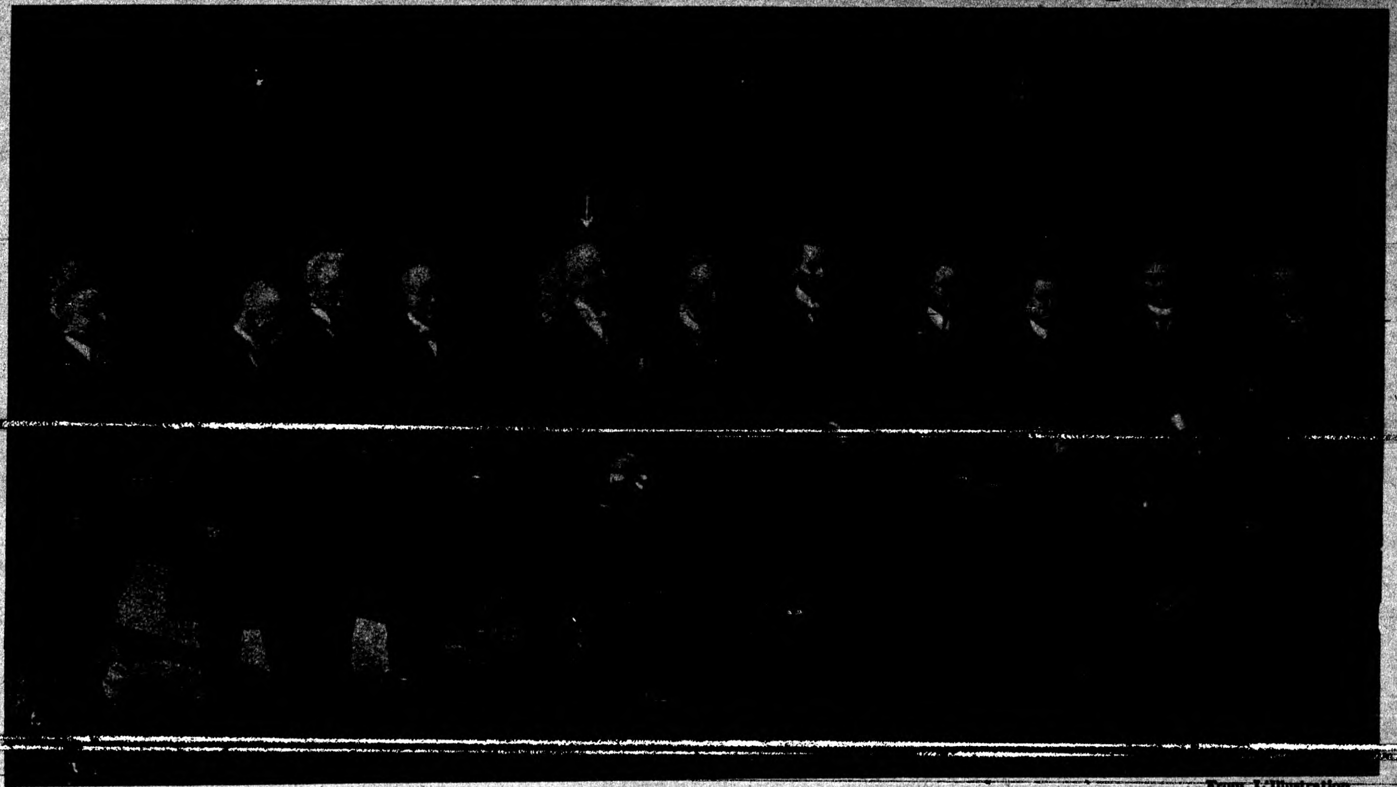
"Yes, but in entertaining we do not like to be called stingier than another."

"And there is no prospect of a return to mid-Victorian simplicity?"

"With those new millionaires? Never!"

I will only add here that my first friend, driving home through the Rue de la Paix, saw tiaras in every jeweler's windows. Evidently the war millionairesses had put in their orders.

Conquered Germans—A Study in Expression



From L'Illustration.

DEJECTION, fear, uneasy defiance, sullenness, resignation—all are represented in this striking photograph of the Mayor, high municipal officials and other prominent citizens of Wiesbaden, Germany, lined up before General Lecomte, commander of the French Army occupying their city, to hear the rules and regulations to be observed by the inhabitants of Wiesbaden during the period of French occupation. The picture was originally published in the French periodical L'Illustration. The man designated by an arrow is the "Regierungs-Praesident," or Mayor, of Wiesbaden.

General Lecomte's harangue to the group of Teutons was concise and to the point. He said:

"In the name of victorious France, I assume from today the command of the Mayence bridgehead and administration of the territory which it comprises. I take note of the sentiments of deference and loyalty which you have just expressed. They will serve as a basis for our relations with each other.

"The iniquitous war forced upon us by Germany and the barbarous way in which she conducted it would give us the right to institute justified reprisals. You feared such reprisals. You need not fear from us such conduct, which would be unworthy of our character, our race, and our past. We come here with the firm resolve to respect property and persons, but none the less determined to maintain the most absolute order. I have the will and the means to assure such order."

THE RIOT OF JOY IN ALSACE

Strasbourg in a Mist of Flags and Bells and Shouts and Tears as the Conquering French Reclaimed Their Own---The Reception Was Itself a Plebiscite

By EMORY POTTLE,
First Lieutenant, United States Army.

IT was Nov. 22. The early morning was haze and shining mist. The supreme shaft—which is the very upsoaring spirit of Strasbourg — Strasbourg's Cathedral spire, marking for miles where lies the city, showed dim and lean and dark. The fluttering glory of France's Tricolor, [illegible] from the spire's furthest reach, was but visible—slowly, radiantly, the hour grew golden. Sun broke through the mist, painted the high flag, shot light into a city that waited her magnificent moment. He who loves symbolism could find it abundantly here. Light out of shadow. Morning and sun after night.

Strasbourg was waiting—waiting for the French!

There is but one splendor in war. Out of all the reek and sweat and blood and [illegible] surpassing, tragically beautiful instant. The instant of triumph. Strasbourg awaited the entry of the French. And the French awaited—what did they not await! Struggle ended, victory accomplished, sacrifice consecrated, they awaited fulfillment. After fifty bitter years the French were coming back, the conquerors, to their own, to Alsace.

At 9:30, over all the rush and surge and shout of innumerable masses, there rang a high, clear, brazen fanfare. Trumpets at the gate of entry! They're here! The French!

Down the dense expectant lanes of people gone mad with enthusiasm, with joy, with hope come true, they rode, the French, in the fine panoply of victory. Gouraud, the beloved General Gouraud five times wounded, his right arm gone, at their head; Gouraud who became a soldier in his youth because of an Alsace and Lorraine lost; Gouraud who is a beautiful tattered, consecrated, victorious, worshipped battle-flag of France. Behind him his soldiers—his enfants, he calls them—his Moroccans, his poilus, his rugged old territorials. Faded khaki, faded blue, stained with war and beautiful with triumph. Heads high, eyes shining through tears; faces gentle and kind and childlike. The famous soldiers of France.

Regiment on regiment they come on with the rattle and rumble of artillery, with the almost unbearable crash and cry and flaunt of martial music—Sambre et Meuse, and over their heads the hum and whir of the airplanes. The human hedges brilliant with banners broke at sight of them. The men and women and children who but a day or two ago had seen with unspeakable relief the sullen, shamed lines of Germans defile through these very streets to cross, God grant forever, their cherished Rhine, threw themselves upon their liberators; arm in arm girls marched on deliriously with the troopers; old women kissed their hands, their cheeks; men with sobs in their throats threw their arms about them as might fathers embrace sons come home. Strasbourg was abloom with flung flowers; the bright morning was a wonderful wind-tossed flag; the world a sudden heart-breaking glory.

The French had come!

No man can write of scenes like these. Words fall idle and empty from the pen. This is a beautiful thing for us who have looked on war to look on triumph. It is a beautiful thing to be a sharer, ever so humbly, in moments such as these. But for us who are not French the soul of the glory must be imagined rather than touched. Even the French themselves falter over descriptions.

They march on, then, the French, to the statue of Kléber in the Place Kléber. Every city has its traditional centre. Strasbourg's is there. A fine free space with a great bronze of Napoleon's General Kléber in its heart, (Kléber was tolerated here by the Germans who chose, as they so insolently choose with many things, to call him one of them.) and [illegible] buildings, old Alsatian, the grace of Louis Quinze in their wall lines and sharp pitched roofs. Here General Gouraud halted. There was an instant of rich silence as the soldier raised his sword to the salute. Then cheers, and cheers, and cheers! It was the shout of floodtide, of seas washing up to immemorial heights. A poem of Browning's—I have forgotten the flow of the lines—comes into my mind as I write. Something of roses all the way and the air a mist of swaying bells. It was like that, Strasbourg. The air was a mist of bells and fine flags, and shouts and tears and smiles, [illegible] repressed at last open. Gouraud rode away, but Strasbourg danced when he had gone at the foot of Kléber's statue, and Kléber in martial bronze, wreathed and flowered, seemed to live again and smile.

"I who am French," said General Gouraud to me a day or two later at his dinner table, "even I did not dream it would be like that when we came in."

Generals Gouraud and Fayolle Awaiting the Arrival of President Poincare at Metz.

Alsatian Girls in Native Costumes Welcoming the French Troops.

And as he spoke his eyes, blue and clear and clean, gentle deep eyes that can flash fire, clouded with emotion.

And Strasbourg itself, the city? Strasbourg and its people, its streets, its buildings, its movement, its quality? There are certain cities that appeal like certain people—at once to be taken to one's heart. The unspoiled traveler, as apt to receive his impressions as to keep old memories, knows them on the instant. Strasbourg is such a city. Gracious, charming, flowing easily and suavely over wide level areas; here a square, here a garden, a park, here a space of pleasant water; streets suggestive of other epochs, yet animated and vigorous with today; a city clean and fresh and sound that has still escaped the bourgeois platitude. Strasbourg en fête, I must confess, gives me a sense of walking in a mediaeval picture book. The fashion of decorations is so tidy, so, as it were, Christmas-like. The pine boughs, the longlooped green garlands, the prim rosettes of tricolor, the strung lanterns, [illegible] gray-white walls, a note so harmonious with the staid charms of the houses. As I write I look up to the aged house opposite, to its three windows, iron-grilled, where hang three very neat white placards, blackly lettered and framed in evergreen: Vive la France, Vive les Alliés, Vive Wilson. They emblem the neat character of the people.

The streets are walled with flags—French, Alsatian, British, Italian, Belgian, and American. American! You and I who are Americans, what is it, then, to see our flag, ours, hundreds of them, tossing in the gay air of these liberated provinces. To see the name of the President of the United States placarded and wreathed in foreign lands, to hear it cheered to the echo! We are all sharers in this. Let us thank God. I have but one great regret in this unbounded week, and that is a regret voiced, too, by the Alsatians and the French. It is the regret that American troops have not been here to take a place in these triumphal entries—so they might have seen what France is to Alsace-Lorraine and what Alsace-Lorraine is to France. And seeing they would have turned homeward overseas to tell to those at home the story of the days when the French came back to their lost provinces. For whatever the profound underlying impulses of these terrible four years have been, it is certain that the retaking of Alsace and Lorraine is a symbol of final accomplishment that appeals richly to the soldier's heart.

But Strasbourg that first day of French entry. It blossomed with its flags. Flags that had lain hidden for years from the brutal German house-to-house visits. Flags that had waved in 1870. Flags that were fashioned yesterday from heaven knows what—sheets, napkins, tablecloths, hastily dyed blue and red overnight. I saw an American flag with six stripes and a field of five stars in a firmament of bluing. An old French woman said beautifully that day: "Oh, we hadn't enough cl[illegible] to make ourselves chemises, but we found enough to make our flags!"

General Gouraud showed me a faded silk flag which rested in a corner of his room. There was an inscription on its field. It was borne, one read, in 1832 at the removal of General Kléber's dead body from the church to the Place Kléber, where it now rests beneath his monument. Three timid old ladies took it to Gouraud the day of his entry. They put it into his hands very simply.

"It is for you," they said. "Our father gave it to us when he died and made us swear to give it to the French when they should come back to Alsace."

They had hidden it in the depths of a sofa in their house, a sofa on which many a German had unsuspectingly sat.

"That is Alsace," said the General to me, reverently.

For four years it has been forbidden to speak French in Alsace. Not even so much as Bonjour. Prison for that offense. But five days before the entry French was again spoken. Now the streets are chattering it brokenly. It is in the blood, in the hearts of these people. The children babble it. Their "Feef la France!" is delightful. And the crowd roared with glee. Men and women who have not spoken French for years fumble through their memories for forgotten words. An old man warped and withered, cried out as we passed: "Feef [vive] les——" he hesitated painfully— "Feef les—" Then the word came. "Feef les libérateurs!"

Impressions crowd in faster than the pen can put them down, incoherent impressions, beautiful, solemn, gay—deathless memories. How Strasbourg danced and cheered at every turn. We dined and lunched with unknown hosts, suddenly become friends. We were kissed and hugged by old and young. The dignified streets broke into song. The "Marseillaise!" Everywhere the "Marseillaise." Once they had the tune it was enough. The words seemed to come instinctively. Le jour de gloire est arrivé! Lads chirped it, whistled it. Girls screamed it at top-lung. Old men, old

THE GROWING MOVEMENT TO PROLONG HUMAN LIFE

FOR many years there has been an ever-growing movement for some central Institute or organization to help prolong human life and make it more livable—a fine, dignified, humanitarian type of organization approved by physicians of the highest ethical standing and irrevocably opposed to fads and quackery.

So it was that a little more than five years ago, a number of forward-looking physicians, scientists, publicists and men of affairs founded the Life Extension Institute.

Primarily, its purpose is to reduce the Nation's death rate and to raise the level of physical well-being by providing unbiased, standardized, periodic health examinations and teaching the simple every-day principles of personal hygiene that every man and woman ought to know to avoid disease.

These are the broad general principles that have led men like ex-President Taft, Alexander Graham Bell, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, Charles H. Sabin, Robert W. de Forest, and one hundred other eminent authorities in this country and abroad, to give their services to the work without compensation—other than the satisfaction of seeing its results.

The Life Extension Institute has nothing marvelous to offer except, perhaps, the most marvelous thing in the world—rational, common-sense employment of tested scientific knowledge.

More than 100,000 men and women in all parts of the United States have taken the health services of the Institute and have received its physical examinations, its guidance and instructions. In this vast number of members, many lives have been saved; much illness, suffering, waste and poverty prevented, proving the value of the Institute.

A Public-Welfare Organization

The Life Extension Institute is not a profit-making institution in the usual sense of the word. Two-thirds of the profits are set aside in a trust fund to be used solely for public health work of a national scope. Thus the independent, non-partisan, specialized character of the Institute and of the professional men behind it inspires confidence and guarantees the genuineness of the service rendered.

The Life Extension Institute itself gives no treatment and does no doctoring. It does give guidance in individual hygiene. If the conditions found cannot be remedied by hygienic measures the member is urged to seek proper medical supervision, surgical or dental attention, and is informed of the type of treatment or medical supervision that would be most advantageous.

The Life Extension Institute has no magic system of exercise, diet or hygiene. So far as science knows, there is no universal panacea for the ills of humanity. Yet human life in the United States is needlessly shortened on an average of at least fifteen years, and it is the duty of every one of [illegible] premature physical breakdown.

Human Life Needlessly Shortened

Every day more than 1500 people die in the United States because they didn't know they were sick until disease had gotten such a start that it was impossible for the physician to check it after he had been called in. Figures show that there are hardly three people in a hundred who do not need some advice or suggestion regarding their physical condition or their manner of living. More than 100,000 men and women between the ages of 40 and 60 years die each year in the United States from diseases of the heart, circulation and kidneys—most of them preventable. These diseases do not develop over night. Detected in time, they can be checked or cured.

The average individual knows only too little about his own body. He may have studied physiology in school, but even those simple rules have been forgotten. Almost blindly he gropes his way through life, fearful of disease and suffering, yet lacking the knowledge to prevent it.

Many a man will take his automobile to the garage every six months to be "overhauled," and yet will not give even passing thought to the most important machine in the world, to him—his body.

Talleyrand would have characterized this as worse than a crime—a blunder!

Are You Fair to Your Body?

Many a woman will go to the dentist every six months to have her teeth looked into "whether they ache or not"—a most commendable procedure—and yet will deny her body the same kind of a safeguarding examination.

How many men and women there are who have never in all their lives had a real, thorough health examination! How many people really know whether they are healthy or not! How many need their attention called to some hidden disease! How many are taking patent nostrums for some wholly imaginary disease while all the time some other serious difficulty is making insidious headway because it has not been pointed out!

To prolong life, to be protected against disease, and in most cases to restore health you must practice hygiene all along the line. Do a workmanlike job in clearing the body of infection, guarding it from further infection, from strain, from poison, from food deficiency and food excess, and you will be adding years to your life and immensely to your efficiency. But first of all you must have your body thoroughly examined to see if there is something wrong that you do not as yet know anything about.

You cannot get safely out of the way of an onrushing automobile by saying there is no automobile there. A better way is to make a careful survey of the street before you cross it.

You cannot escape pneumonia, or heart trouble, or kidney trouble, etc., by saying simply that you have never had it or that you feel all right today. You don't know. Often special laboratory or other diagnostic tests are necessary to reveal the difficulty. The only way to retain good health is by detection and correction of physical impairments and by the improvement of your resisting power to wholly escape the malady that threatens.

Preceding most serious illness there is usually a long period of impairment or of progressive changes that gradually reduce the value of the individual to himself and to society. These changes are frequently so slow and insidious that you do not realize them until they are well advanced, but from the very beginning they leave signs that science can detect.

The Life Extension Institute offers you periodic health examinations and laboratory tests for the purpose of detecting disease in its incipiency, when proper treatment can check or cure it.

The Institute's system of examinations and reports was formulated in consultation with the members of the Hygiene Reference Board—men who have been engaged for years in analyzing human lives and the influences that impair them. This system has been standardized from the Institute's wide experience in examining many thousands of individuals. And the physical examination is only one part of the Institute's service!

Membership further includes quarterly chemic and microscopic examinations of the urine, review of the member's personal and family history, daily living habits and health problems, detailed reports, hygienic guidance and instruction, monthly health journals and keep-well leaflets.

Members also have the privilege of communicating with the Educational Department of the Institute at any time during the year for general information relating to disease prevention and the prolongation of life.

A Staff of 5000 Physicians

It makes no difference where you live. The Life Extension Institute comes to you wherever you are. It has its main office right here in New York, a branch office in Chicago, and a staff of more than 5000 physicians throughout the United States.

Consider this Health Examination in the form of an investment. If there is anything wrong with you, you want to know about it. And if there isn't anything the matter, you want to know that, too.

With good health every day—with less worry—you could do practically twice the work you are doing now. Surely you could do it better. Surely life would hold more of the things that we all hold dear.

The cost of membership in the Life Extension Institute is low, because of its humanitarian character and national ideals.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York and vicinity are made at the main office of the Institute, 25 West Forty-fifth Street—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M.

Convenient appointments can also be arranged with the Institute's examiners in the member's home district or city.

Visitors are always welcome at the main office of the Institute. Women physicians are available for the convenience of women members who prefer them.

The Ability to Become a Convincing Talker

By GEORGE RAYMOND

"HAVE you heard the news about Frank Jordan?"

This question quickly brought me to the little group which had gathered in the center of the office. Jordan and I had started with the Great Eastern Machinery Co. within a month of each other, four years ago. A year ago, Jordan was taken into the accounting division and I was sent out as salesman. Neither of us was blessed with an unusual amount of brilliancy, but we "got by" in our new jobs well enough to hold them.

Imagine my amazement, then, when I heard:

"Jordan's just been made Treasurer of the Company!"

I could hardly believe my ears. But there was the "Notice to Employees" on the bulletin board, telling about Jordan's good fortune.

Now I knew that Jordan was a capable fellow, quiet and unassuming, but I never would have picked him for any such sudden rise. I knew, too, that the Treasurer of the Great Eastern had to be a big man, and I wondered how in the world Jordan landed the place.

The first chance I got I walked into Jordan's new office and, after congratulating him warmly, I asked him to let me "in" on the details of how he jumped ahead so quickly. His story is so intensely interesting that I am going to repeat it as closely as I remember.

FREDERICK HOUK LAW

As educator, lecturer, executive, traveler and author few men are so well equipped by experience and training as Dr. Law to teach the art of effective speaking. His "Mastery of Speech" is the fruit of 20 years' active lecturing and instruction in Eastern schools and colleges preceded by an education at Oxford Academy, Amherst College, Columbia University, The Teachers College, Brown University, and New York University. He [illegible] A. B., A. M. and Ph. D.

Dr. Law is the author of two novels, two books of poetry, and editor of six school text-books. At present he is lecturer in English in New York University, Lecturer in Pedagogy in the Extension Work of the College of the City of New York, Head of the Dept. of English in the Stuyvesant H. S. and writer of the Weekly Lesson Plans for The Independent.

"I'll tell you just how it happened, George, because you may pick up a pointer or two that will help you.

"You remember how scared I used to be whenever I had to talk to the chief? You remember how you used to tell me that every time I opened my mouth I put my foot into it, meaning, of course, that every time I spoke I got into trouble? You remember when Ralph Sinton left to take charge of the Western office and I was asked to present him with the loving cup the boys gave him, how flustered I was and how I couldn't say a word because there were people around? You remember how confused I used to be every time I met new people? I couldn't say what I wanted to say when I wanted to say it; and I determined that if there was any possible chance to learn how to talk I was going to do it.

"The first thing I did was to buy a number of books on public speaking, but they seemed to be meant for those who wanted to become orators, whereas what I wanted to learn was not only how to speak in public, but how to speak to individuals under various conditions in business and social life.

"A few weeks later, just as I was about to give up hope of ever learning how to talk interestingly, I read an announcement stating that Dr. Frederick Houk Law of New York University had just completed a new course in business talking and public speaking entitled 'Mastery of Speech.' The course was offered on approval without money in advance, so since I had nothing whatever to lose by examining the lessons, I sent for them, and in a few days they arrived. I glanced through the entire eight lessons, reading the headings and a few paragraphs here and there, and in about an hour the principles of effective speaking were clear to me.

"For example, I learned why I had always lacked confidence, why talking had always seemed something to be dreaded, whereas it is really not a difficult thing to 'get up and talk.' I learned how to secure attention to what I was saying and how to make what I said interesting, forceful and convincing. I learned the art of listening, the value of silence, and the power of brevity. Instead of being funny at the wrong time, I learned how and when to use humor with telling effect.

"But perhaps the most wonderful thing about the lessons were the actual examples of what things to say and when to say them to meet varying conditions. I found that there was a knack in making oral reports to my superiors. I found that there was a right way and a wrong way to present complaints, to give estimates, and to issue orders.

"I picked up some wonderful pointers about how to give my opinions, about how to answer complaints, about how to ask the bank for a loan, about how to ask for extensions. Another thing that struck me forcibly was that, instead of antagonizing people when I didn't agree with them, it is best to bring them around to my way of thinking in the most pleasant sort of way. Then, of course, along with those lessons there were chapters on speaking before large audiences, how to find material for talking and speaking, how to talk to friends, how to talk to servants, and how to talk to children.

"Why, I got the idea the very first evening and it was only a short time before I was able to apply the principles and found that my words were beginning to be effective upon those to whom I spoke. It seemed that I got things done quickly, where formerly, as you know, what I said 'went in one ear and out the other.' I began to acquire an executive ability that surprised me. I smoothed out difficulties like a true diplomat. In my talks with the chief I spoke clearly, simply, convincingly. Then came my first promotion since I entered the acounting department. I was given the job of answering complaints, and I made good. From that I was given the job of making collections. When Mr. Buckley joined the Officers' Training Camp, I was made Treasurer. Between you and me, George, my salary is now $7500 a year and I expect it will be more from the first of the year.

"And I want to tell you sincerely, that I attribute much of my success to the fact that I learned how to talk to people."

When Jordan finished, I asked him for the address of the publishers of Dr. Law's Course and he gave it to me. I sent for it and found it to be exactly as he had stated. After studying the eight simple lessons I began to sell to people who had previously refused to listen to me at all. After four months of record breaking sales during the dullest season of the year, I received a wire from the chief asking me to return to the home office. We had quite a long talk in which I explained how I was able to break sales records—and I was appointed Sales Manager at almost twice my former salary. I know that there was nothing in me that had changed except that I had acquired the ability to talk well where formerly I simply used "words without reason." I can never thank Jordan enough for telling me about Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking. Jordan and I are both spending all our spare time making public speeches on war subjects and Jordan is being talked about now as Mayor of our little Town.

So confident is the Independent Corporation, publishers of "Mastery of Speech," Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking, that once you have an opportunity to see in your own home how you can, in one hour, learn the idea of speaking and how you can apply the principles of effective speech under all conditions, that they are willing to send you the Course on free examination.

women shouted it piously. The day of glory had arrived at last. There stands in the heart of Strasbourg an old unassuming house that bears a garlanded word of recall to those who passing glance above its door: "La 'Marseillaise' fût chantée pour la première fois dans cette maison par Rouget de l'Isle, le 25 Avril, 1792." Small wonder, then, that the immortal air comes familiarly and full from the Strasbourgers' throats in the city where first it was sung,

"Qu'un sang impur
Abreuve nos sillons."

The very shops made festival with windows filled—for want of modern France—with old long-hidden engravings, Louis XIV., Louis XV.; bright chromos of the soldiers of '70 in the historic red breeches; obsolescent arms of other periods; old French volumes, and I know not what else of touching cherished souvenir—shops, too, that had changed their names overnight and bore broadsides of white hastily lettered cloth to conceal the German shop names underneath. Rathskellers blossomed into cafés de la Marne, de la République. Lodgings ceased to be Hofs and were fashionably Hôtels de Paris; and where there was a recalcitrant boche, the delighted crowds swooped down upon him, shut his doors, banned his wares and went on, mightily amused, to fresh exploits. I can see them now as I put down the pen—how gay and charming they were, the women in their Alsatian costumes, butterflying, laughing, singing, arms linked to placid grinning poilus, whose note of blue was so harmonious with the gray houses and the bright dresses. All day long they wandered up and down, hand-in-hand with victory—enchanting children.

An old man, supported by two other men of middle age, stood at a corner. He was very old and frail. His hands and his body shook senilely, though from time to time with an effort he tried to straighten himself to a soldier's bearing. For he wore the uniform of a soldier and his breast was covered with unfamiliar medals. The uniform was the blue and red of France and '70; the medals were the medals of old campaigns. I stood beside him a moment and took his hand, "My sons have brought me here today," he said, very simply, "that I may look again on French soldiers, mes frères. Now they may take me home. I am content to die."

The wild, dancing, wonderful day turned into night. Rosy globes of paper lanterns shone in windows. Yellow light, rich and smiling, flooded over the charming, sauntering crowds, lit the forests of beautiful flags. And all night long Strasbourg sang the "Marseillaise." Sang it? Was it, so it seemed to me.

Before the place that was once known as the Emperor's stood a bronze statue. The statue of the man who was once William II. of Germany. Quietly, determinedly, placidly, one might almost say, the Strasbourgers gathered there the night that preceded the entry of the French. Five hundred of them tore the image down. It fell with a great brazen clang. They hacked it, battered it, sawed it, chopped it to fragments.

The head of the statue is in the Student's Club today—on the floor in a corner. They use it to spit into.

It is a tremendous and solemn thing to assist at the great making of great history. And yet our small daily habits of living and thinking and being so mechanically repeat themselves that even in the midst of days which shall figure as immortal in written records one has constantly to remind one's self of one's high privilege. Perhaps, after all, the sense of great moments always seems predestined for those of new generations who shall one day read in printed page of the things dead men have done.

This might be a record of triumphal entries; but the first marvel of the 22d will scarcely again be wrought. We have seen Gouraud, glorious, mutilated. We have seen again, the 25th, a Marshal of France, surrounded by Generals whose names will one day be spoken as we have been wont to speak the names of Napoleon's Generals. Perhaps, too, with greater admiration. Pétain came, the great soldier. I've an impression of a pale, strong, kindly face, Pétain's. He and his Generals rode on over the same route that Gouraud had taken, their troops, their bands, gloriously following. Again Strasbourg threw its cap to the skies, wildly cheered its heart out. After he had reviewed the troops the Marshal turned and with an extraordinary simplicity—these men are simple men—embraced his Generals, Castelnau and Gouraud. It was the more touching for us who knew that Gouraud's mother but two days before had died.

That day, the 25th, there was a Te Deum sung in the Cathedral of Strasbourg. That sentence as it is written has but little significance, I know. How can I put into words what I should like to say? A Te Deum of victory in the Strasbourg Cathedral. You who know the Cathedral—the vast up-sweeping spaces, dim and incensed, where stained light slants richly through windows of precious glass—you will need no words.

The great Kléber's sword has been kept piously all these years by Strasbourg—for Kléber was born here.

On the 27th the Commander in Chief of all the Allied Armies entered the city. I shall speak but little of the panoply and brilliance of that procession. The great Marshal, accompanied by the Generals de Castelnau and Weygand, rode in magnificently. He gave decorations. He reviewed the troops in the centre of the citadel. And Strasbourg was at his feet. It is not of this I wish to tell you. After all that was over Foch and his Generals rode to the Place Kléber. Troops formed a square about the statue. The band broke into the reckless splendid Sambre et Meuse. Then silence—deep silence. The Marshal took off his own sword and received from the hands of one of his Generals the sword of Kléber. He rode alone to the foot of the statue—unsheathed the sword—saluted—rode away.

How finely these French keep their sense of décor. History in the making—and so beautifully made. That slim, sad-eyed, triumphant figure on horseback, drawing a shining sword before the triumphant statue—I shall never forget [illegible] The great Foch.

"Le plébiscite est fait."

The President of France on the balcony of the Hôtel de Ville at Strasbourg the 9th of December so began his address. A small, hatless man, mild of face, meekly bearded, pink of cheek, in evening dress, he became abruptly a noble figure. His voice rang out finely, firmly. His eyes gratefully sought the field of faces stretching far beyond the limits of the long deep Place Broglie. These faces met his with a turmoil of hurrahs. With an inspiration at a moment that deserves well of history, M. Poincaré lucidly, triumphantly, made the phrase that was the keynote of Strasbourg's last fête, the welcome of the Government to the provinces regained.

The popular vote has been taken. Here was the answer to the German contention so long maintained that a popular vote would result in the decision of Alsace and Lorraine to remain under German rule. These exuberant crowds, joyfully unrestrained, yet under the stress of an emotion, profound, religious, I might almost say—one saw it in their eyes, in their faces, felt it in their hearts—these people, then, and all through that amazing beautiful day, were, if any people ever were, the pure exemplification of the Wilsonian doctrine that a people has the right to dispose of itself, governmentally, as it shall will.

A Frenchman, who stood beside me in that fine instant when Poincaré clarioned his "Le plébiscite est fait" and Alsace responded, turned to me and in a voice moved and moving, said: "Monsieur l'Américain, we have not taken Alsace-Lorraine. They have come to us!"

The President of France stood bareheaded on the balcony and opened his arms, the arms of France, to the children of his country. Beside him M. Clemenceau, Clemenceau the tiger, a rugged, white-haired, stocky, high-colored old man, whose eyes gleam fire and fun and tears. What an old age for a man to have! At 80, hatless, on a bleak, raw day, to be cried to the skies; the man who brought his country from its wilderness to its Canaan. What amazing moments, Destiny, too wont to be perverse, has given to this indomitable old man. It is a fine thing to "go down to the grave with a shout." And behind these two the three Marshals of France and Sir Douglas Haig, and General Pershing, an Italian General, a Belgian, Serbian officers, the men whose armies had made possible this moment.

The hours of Monday went by in a reel of Marseillaise and Sambre et Meuse and cheers and tears and all the manifestations given to light hearts and sound, ardent faith. Streams of General-laden

"La Libre Belgique" Mystery Solved at Last

Here Are the Names and Story of the Men Who Defied Death Throughout German Occupation of Belgium by Issuing Famous Clandestine Newspaper

[Translated from Le Petit Parisien of Jan. 7, 1919.]

Brussels, December ——.

EVER since the invasion of Belgium, the Belgian press behaved admirably. Our colleagues refused energetically to submit to German censorship and suspended, purely and simply, the publication of their papers. Ever since that time, the enemy's Government, to propagate its false news, has had to create some papers of its own, which were always newspapers without readers.

But it was necessary that the Belgian public receive good and correct news; there was need of a paper to inform it of what was happening beyond the lines and to uphold its courage. The project was audacious and extremely dangerous for editors, proofreaders, compositors, and deliverymen risked, in case of discovery, the penalty of execution.

This sinister outlook did not restrain certain patriotic men of Brussels, who, after taking all precautions, launched one fine day La Libre Belgique. [Free Belgium.] This valiant little paper from the day of its first appearance had a considerable success among the Belgians, and plunged the famous von Bissing into the greatest rage. Free Belgium entitled itself modestly: "A Bulletin of Patriotic Propaganda, Regularly Irregular, Submitting to Absolutely No Censorship." The office of the publishers was ironically announced as at the "Kommandantur-Brussels." As for the editing, it was said that "not being able to be always in a place of complete rest," it was done in a "cave moved about by automobile."

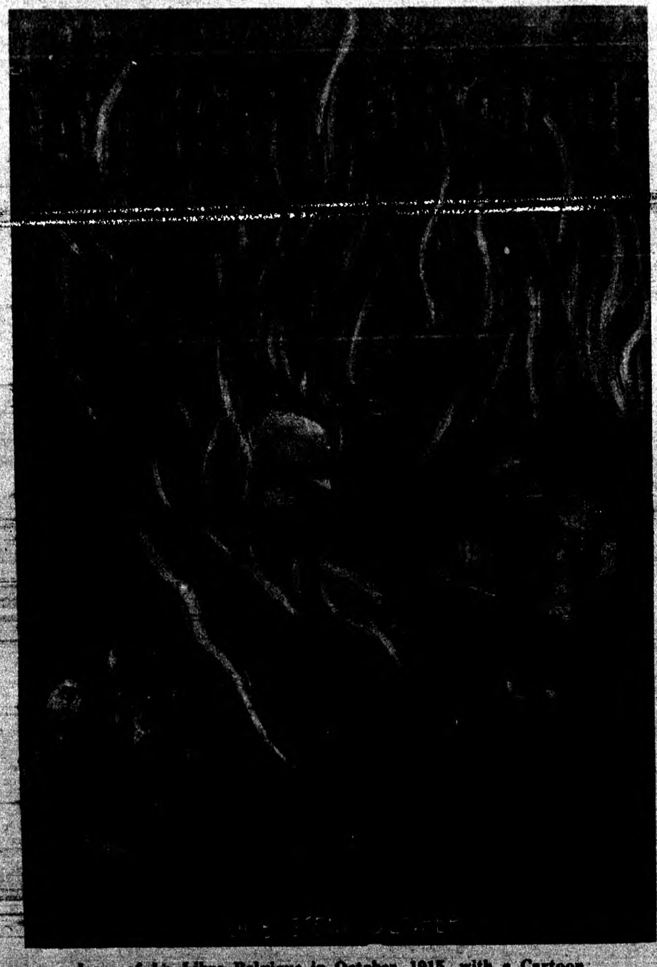
The German Governor General multiplied his orders to discover the authors of Free Belgium, distributed free throughout the whole kingdom. He mobilized, for this end, an army of police; he offered a very large reward to any one who could furnish information of value to his spies. It was in vain.

The hundreds of thousands of readers knew no more than von Bissing who edited and composed the courageous little paper. They received it at more or less regular dates; they read it with eagerness; they were amused by the caricatures of the Governor General and his subordinates; they passed it on secretly, as the mere fact of possessing a copy was considered a misdemeanor—and that was all.

But what anxiety for the editors! Every one feared that they would soon be discovered; for a printing shop is not so easily hidden as a package of needles, and when an unusually long interval separated two numbers, there was great trembling for the brave men who laughed so obstinately and so wittily at von Bissing and his thunderings.

The clandestine publication of Free Belgium ended with the signing of the armistice. The people of Brussels have now learned, with lively surprise, that it was in the capital itself and in a neighboring suburb that the composition and printing of the prohibited paper were done. The unpublished story of the circumstances in which Free Belgium was founded has just been revealed to us by M. Eugene van Doren, its principal author, or, at least, he who composed it, printed it and distributed it with the aid of several Belgian journalists of talent, among whom were M. Victor Jourdain, editor in chief of the Patriote, who furnished the necessary funds, and M. van de Kercheve, who, under the signature of "Fidelis," chastised the invaders with a vigorous and witty pen.

The title was given by M. Victor Jourdain who took charge of the editing. M. van Doren assumed the task of publishing and industrial organization. The first number published the magnificent letter of Cardinal Mercier, "Patriotism and Endurance." The copies were put in envelopes by M. van Doren with the assistance of his wife; he delivered them himself to Representatives and Senators, and he carried packages of them to the Jesuits, the Dominicans, the Redemptorists, and to numerous friendly houses.



Issue of La Libre Belgique in October, 1915, with a Cartoon Showing the Kaiser in Hell.

As M. van Doren was constantly exposed to danger, he judged it prudent to take certain precautions. He bought a cane, the end of which he hollowed out carefully. It was into this hiding place that he put the copies made by the press on silk paper. All the manuscripts, in fact, were recopied by him on the press, then destroyed.

After the third number, immediately following a visit of the police to the home of Madame Massardo, wife of a bookseller of the Galeries Saint-Hubert, who served as the intermediary for the copy, the printer refused his help. Further, the copy for this number had to be thrown into the fire. M. the Abbe Demeer, to whom M. van Doren intrusted the secret, obtained the consent of another printer, M. Allaer, on the condition that when the printing was done, the issues of Free Belgium be delivered to M. van Doren in a public street. All went well this way. Friends and collaborators increased and the paper produced, at each issue, a new sensation * * * and redoubled the searches of the German police.

It was urgent, however, to take new precautions. M. van Doren, anxious about the life of his printer, decided to compose the paper at his own house. In consequence, he bought the necessary material—in order to prevent the spies from following the trail by the easy identification of characters. And he installed the plant on the Avenue Verte, at Woluwe, in an abandoned house, where he could work in all security with the aid of two professional printers, the Allaer brothers. Again, Free Belgium appeared without interruption.

As its success became greater and greater, it was necessary to insure delivery of the paper to the houses of the subscribers. The co-operation of an ardent patriot was secured. He was Phillipe Bauco, whom the Germans shot at the same time as Miss Cavell. The work was divided up thus: M. van Doren kept for himself the delivery of the big packages, and Phillipe Baucq effected the distribution of single papers.

The devotion of this man was so splendid that he alone distributed four or five thousand copies. He made trips at night on a bicycle. Later, when the bicycling was forbidden, he went on foot. At one time he walked for two days without rest.

Each new day made necessary the most minute precautions. M. van Doren decided to print Free Belgium, which, until then, was only set up in his shop at Woluwe. M. Victor Jourdain furnished the necessary funds to buy a foot-power press, which was installed at Molenbeeck, a suburb of Brussels, in an outbuilding of a factory belonging to M. van Doren. From then on, the paper was set up at Woluwe and printed at Molenbeeck.

But the transportation of material was not always an easy matter. M. van Doren had to make two little cases, which, when filled, weighed about twenty kilos. Also, when he got aboard a trolley car with packages so small, yet so heavy, he was always an object of curiosity to passengers.

In the midst of these inconveniences there arose at times amusing incidents. One day, especially, while M. Louis Allaer was carrying 4,000 copies of Free Belgium he was obligingly aided by some German soldiers, who lifted the box to his shoulder!

The success of Free Belgium progressed with such rapidity, to the constantly growing anger of the Governor General, whose spies came back empty-handed day after day, that the printing shop had to be enlarged. A new machine was bought and carried piece by piece to the shop at Molenbeeck. There M. van Doren was surrounded by Germans; it was necessary to prevent the noise of the motor from giving them the alarm. Remember that there was a reward of 100,000 francs for him who should discover the office of the forbidden paper! M. van Doren secured the necessary tools and materials, and simply walled up the press and the motor. Before the wall he placed some furniture, and he entered his shop by a little door hidden behind some scrap iron and cardboard boxes.

When the installation was done, there was published the famous number which showed on the front page the picture of von Bissing seated at his desk reading Free Belgium. Throughout Belgium people literally tore copies of this issue from each other's hands.

Soon after, on the occasion of the Belgian national holiday, Free Belgium summoned the people of Brussels to meet at Sainte-Gudule. It was the most beautiful manifestation of patriotism that can be imagined. Those present thundered out the "Brabanconne," then, carried away by their enthusiasm, all followed with "Toward the Future."

The German spies were on the trail; the plant had to be broken up in great haste; the material was carried to the house of a friend of Baucq, on the Rue d'Arlon, at Brussels. These tribulations did not discourage M. van Doren. The book "J'Accuse" had just appeared in Switzerland; he decided to publish it in installments in Free Belgium. Publication began in No. 50 of the paper. Twenty thousand copies had to be printed.

The danger became pressing. Searches were made without end and arrest followed arrest. Not at all worried, M. van Doren published a new number with a dedication in caricature, representing von Bissing bowed down under the weight of a stack of search warrants against Free Belgium. Then he launched an illustrated paper entitled La Cravache, (The Whip,) printing 10,000 copies, which were distributed free.

The catastrophe happened. Discovered, M. van Doren had time to take flight and found refuge with relatives, later with friends, at Brussels, where he stayed for several months, laughing at the searches of the police. But Free Belgium did not discontinue its irregular appearances, thanks to the devotion of several patriotic Belgians. This one and that one might be arrested, or sentenced, but some one would pick up the interrupted work. Among them were merchants, printers, bankers, priests, lawyers, politicians. Never could the Germans get hold of Free Belgium, in spite of the years of forced labor that they inflicted upon its successive collaborators.

This is a moving story. It does honor to the Belgian press, to the valor and patriotism of our glorious allies.

Masterpiece by Brouwer at Lotos Club

Art at Home and Abroad

"La Tabagie," by Adriaen Brouwer. Lent by Michael Friedsam to Lotos Club Exhibition of Paintings by Seventeenth Century Masters.

ADRIAEN BROUWER with his library of eight books and his map of the Siege of Breda, his one collar and five cuffs and his dozen paint brushes, his love of tobacco and drink and his joy in lively companionship, his debts and mad pranks, his liberality and kindness and freedom from vanity, was, above all else that can be said of him, a great painter.

The picture by him called "La Tabagie" and lent by Mr. Michael Friedsam to the recent exhibition of seventeenth century masters at the Lotos Club is in his most brilliant manner, with an authority of handling and a vitality and movement that place him by the side of Frans Hals. Much as he cared for his paint, he cared as much for his comrades and found it important to do justice to their individuality with foibles and virtues, with humor and passion interrogated and noted. He had a chance in this tavern subject that must have been quite to his taste. He was celebrating one of the happy moments of his varied adventurous life, one of the moments when, with his friends, he was smoking and drinking deep at a favorite inn. The principal figure is said to be a portrait of the artist himself, and shows him in a rollicking schoolboy mood, puffing out the smoke from his mouth in great rings, the pewter stein in his hand, his legs in high boots stretched out in front of him, gay red tassels adorning his olive green trousers, his big frame lounging easily and his head thrown back. One of the friends by his side, leaning forward, laughing good naturedly, is said to be Hals, a very different creature from the stately personage depicted by Heythuysen in the portrait at Vienna, the Hals of gauntlet and sword and brocaded doublet, but hardly less obviously a patrician. Behind him, a hat pulled low over his face, is Adriaen van Ostade, Arie de Vois is there, and some one has seen in the man at the left the painter Wouverman, engaged in the pleasing pastime of closing one nostril with his finger and puffing tobacco smoke out from the other. A very simple party, and no one at all the worse for his liquor it would seem, but every one much the better in spirits for the cheerful companionship of these unaffected souls—simple and unaffected indeed, and making the most of the hospitality afforded by a common barroom with coarse furnishings, but what a magnificent company withal! Shakespeare knew their peers.

The detail in the composition shows clearly how an artist trained as Brouwer was to draw with the utmost precision such minor things as boots and buttons, pipes and jugs, can take his minute and exact knowledge and merge it in a free light brush-stroke that tells you all you wish to know about the things described and saves you all the boredom of unnecessary description. Everything is swept into the general impression of a gusty mood and the portraiture of character, yet how right is the fold of the napkin, the sag of the broom on the floor, the perspective of bench and stool, the crumple of the paper that has fallen on the floor, and how charming is the bit of outdoor world seen in its freshness through the window of the smoke-befogged room.

The color is that of the artist's late period, somewhat gray in tone with vivid accents of local color, the characteristic red enlivening the delicate and sensitive grays.

The picture is a master's masterpiece. Modern collectors are not the first to appreciate Brouwer. Rubens owned more pictures by him than by any other artist, and Rembrandt owned eight of his paintings and eight of his drawings, and people paid as much for his little pictures as for the large ones of Hals and Rembrandt. He was not of those who waited for their fame until it could bring them no satisfaction, although he died a young man.

An Important Meeting.

Five art associations have united to develop a meeting on industrial art at the Metropolitan Museum. This meeting will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 11, in the auditorium of the museum. At this time our national needs and opportunities in the industrial arts will be discussed by a half dozen practical speakers, each of them in close touch with trade conditions.

This meeting has been fostered by the Municipal Art Society, which recently appointed a committee to further a plan for the development of industrial art schools in New York City. The other societies co-operating in the meeting are the Art Alliance of America, which is particularly interested in enlisting the support of manufacturers in the movement; the Art in Trades Club, which represents a large group of men in the art trades; the School Art League, which is fostering industrial art scholarships for public school graduates, and the Art Department of the City Schools, which has been active in developing various phases of practical art teaching throughout the city school system.

Dr. James P. Haney, Director of Art in the High Schools, will preside at the meeting and the speakers will include Leon V. Solon, who will speak on "The Industrial Arts as Taught Abroad"; Miss Florence N. Levy, who will describe the growth of interest on the part of manufacturers in this country; Frank Alvah Parsons, who will outline co-operative work which is required on the part of the manufacturer in the development of industrial art schools.

The meeting will open at 8:15 and will be free to the public.

The Mirbeau Collection.

The Octave Mirbeau collection of paintings and sculpture is to be sold in Paris at the Durand-Ruel Galleries on Feb. 24, and there is every reason to suppose that more than one of its fine examples of modern French art will find the way to this country. M. Mirbeau had the courage of his convictions and bought the works of the men he praised before they were recognized as masters by the public. Monet, Renoir, Cezanne, Van Gogh, Pissarro, Rodin, and Maillol are among those represented in his collection, which is sold because his widow wishes to transform the house where he wrote his last works into a home for unfortunate writers and artists. Among the Cezannes are two self portraits. Van Gogh's portrait of "Le Pere Tanguy" is one of the most striking features of the catalogue. The designs, by Rodin, are in a manner quite unfamiliar to the larger part of his public, very plastic in character and carried out in gouache. There is a nude, by Renoir, and there is a large group of Maillol's sculptures, besides work by the talented younger men seldom seen in this country.

When a Britisher Comes to Wall Street

C. W. D. is an Englishman who came to this country as a member of Lord Reading's personal staff, and subsequently was set to work with a desk at J. P. Morgan's. Below are extracts from a personal letter home. It was printed in a "special America number" of Impressions, a London periodical edited by G. E. Whitehouse.

SINCE the beginning of December I have been in New York attached to Sir Hardman Lever, K. C. B., Financial Secretary to the (British) Treasury in U. S. A. At Washington, while Lord Reading was there in October, we worked all hours of the night; from the time of Lord Reading's return to England until I came to New York I worked about one hour a day on the average; and since I have been at New York I have worked like a nigger, or, rather, like h—ll, (because niggers don't love work,) and it gets worse every day. When Lord Reading returned here as Ambassador Extraordinary and Special High Commissioner, (&c., and all that sort of thing,) I hoped to get back to Washington on his staff; I wouldn't have minded if it was only to clean his boots; but that hope didn't materialize, and I expect to remain in New York until 1950 or thereabout.

There are a lot of thundering good jokes over here, such as skyscrapers, (which are beyond belief,) barbers, and boot cleaning. The latter is a complex operation, taking about fifteen minutes. No one over here would clean his own boots unless he were a low swine. Niggers are too dignified, even, to do such a thing. Also, you don't put your boots outside a hotel or boarding-house bedroom door unless you are desirous of having them thrown into the dust-bin, (which is usually an incinerator.) No, Siree, boot cleaning is an art, performed only by professionals. It goes somewhat as follows, (while writing this I have had my boots cleaned; that is how they do things over here, especially in institutions like J. P. Morgan & Co., where we have our office,) namely:

1. The dust is brushed off with one brush.
2. A strong smelling oil is applied with another brush, (circular.)
   Then there is an interval while the the above processes are being applied to the second boot.
3. The first boot is dried by fanning it with a third brush.
4. The oil is rubbed off with a sponge.
5. A liquid (light or dark as required) is applied (I am speaking of brown boots, which are all the rage) with a fourth brush.
6. Boot is polished with a cloth.
7. Polish from a tin is applied by hand.
8. Boot is brushed till polished.
9. Boot is again polished with a cloth.
10. Processes 3 to 9 inclusive are performed on the other boot.
11. The artist packs away his tools and picks up his box, (I had almost said palette,) surveying his handiwork with pride.
12. Artist graciously accepts 10 cents, (5 pence.)
13. Ditto beats it. (Departs; goes; leaves; vamooses.)

Such is boot cleaning. But shaving is considerably more so. And hair cutting! * * * (note of exclamation.) Shaving only takes a quarter of an hour if you ask for a special quick English once over; but hair cutting, at top gear, cannot be "gotten" through under half an hour. Everybody (except low foreigners like myself) has his neck shaved to the shoulder as ancillary to the hair-cutting process. I defeat them by keeping my collar on. American hustle, not to be defeated, (though it is heavily engaged, believe me, by these interminable rites,) causes its devotees to have one hand manicured by one charming damsel on one side and the other hand dittoed by another ditto ditto on the other side, while a nigger or half-cast gives the patient's boots a shine. Thus numerous birds are killed with but a single stone.

The slang over here is brilliant. I still talk English myself, simply because I haven't got the brains to acquire the American tongue. Mon Dieu! (as the Gentle B. would not say) but this is a nation of fertile wit! They not only have several slang expressions for everything under the sun, but daily invent a thousand new ones. If a gentleman says: "See that thoid (third) basement dancing with the shavetail over there," he would mean to direct your attention to the stoutness of the dancing partner of the young and experienced Second Lieutenant (loot) indicated. * * * But instead of saying dancing, he would probably say "throwing the boot."

I forgot to tell you above that if you escape the manicures and the boot artists your shave costs you 15 cents, plus 10 cents tip for the shavier (? shavist shavester) and 5 cents tip for the altruist who helps you on with your coat—total, 1s 3d. Hair cutting, 40 cents plus 10 cents plus 5 cents—total, (approximately,) 2s 3½d. So, if you have both, you couldn't buy a battleship with the change out of a dollar.

Of course I'm homesick a bit. The thought of London seems kinder heavenly, although this is a land flowing with milk and honey. And then, how can a guy sleep without air raids? The nearest approach to the gentle strains of the guns that I have heard over here have been (1) a series of explosions when a barge of explosives blew up in the river the other day, causing sympathetic blow-ups of some half-dozen ammonia tanks; (2) the firing of machine guns among the skyscrapers—which is how they sell Liberty bonds over here. You never saw such a splendid orgy of written, spoken, shouted, sung advertising as accompanies these loan drives.

And the dern buildings! I could use up all the superlatives in the dictionary without giving you an idea of 'em. Arnold Bennett to the contrary notwithstanding, the Woolworth Building, which is stupendous, is also pleasing to the eye. And my aesthetic sense can't rail at the ugly ones, because it is squashed by wonder. Pictures and figures give you simply no idea of the immensity of these skyscrapers. Every time I see them I am astonished again. Every point of view seems more impressive than the last. Perhaps the best way to get an idea of their size is to go, say, to the twentieth floor of a building near the Woolworth, look down at the twelve-story buildings far below, the elevated railways far below these, and the people, (like ants,) and trolley cars, (like matchboxes,) still lower, and then look up to the top of the Woolworth away in the clouds.

It is rather a jest to contrast the work I am now doing with the work I was originally engaged to do. I was told my job would consist of hiking around with Lord R. to conferences and taking a verbatim note thereof. At this present moment I am keeping records of exchange rates, sterling balances in London, rupee credits in United States, purchases of sterling exchange in New York, exports, imports, Treasury bill operations in this country, dollar expenditure, (plotting out charts of chartable figures,) and preparing all sorts of statements of loans to Allies. I am getting bald and haggard. Besides Sir H. there is only one other gink in the office, and as he got here first he kindly permits me to do all the work; and besides the trifles above mentioned we control the entire war purchases of Great Britain in the United States, (from the money end of it,) and the detail work is absolutely crushing. This is the first time I have been able to write a letter in the office for months, and I can only do so now because my boss is at Washington for a few days and we have cleaned up the work to date. Yes, Siree! I did not know what "woik" was until I came here.

motor cars edged through masses of applauding people. Marshals, as a dry old poilu put it to me, were like leaves under one's feet. One fell into a kind of sublimated familiarity with the great and mighty, and were like to clap them on the shoulders in excess of enthusiasm. And then came the culmination of the festivity. Into an immense space set about with grandiose buildings, the citadel, there crowded themselves thousands and thousands; the roofs, the balconies, the windows of these buildings were black with bodies and white with faces and waved handkerchiefs. In a canopied tribune stood the President and Clemenceau, tears in his eyes, (how they shouted "Vive le Tigre!") the Marshals, the Generals. The review of the troops began. Troops on foot, troops mounted, artillery, tanks, each element with its clang and crash of music. (Have you ever heard the scream and whine of the little Moroccan pipes? Next to the Scotch bagpipes, it is the most terrifying, delirious sound I know.) And when the last of the soldiers had passed, the men and women, the boys and girls of Alsace followed.

No one, I think, who saw those groups pass the President's stand saw it unmoved, and no one having seen it will ever forget. They came, hundreds of young girls, in their national costume, and at the sense of the instant, its elation, its rich significance, coupled with the surge and rhythm of the bands gained on their hearts, their feet refused to march. They danced in garlands, in festoons, in circles, with young, gay, lovely, glowing movements. Their hands were full of flowers, and, laughing, they threw them at the President as they went dancing by. Some of them, bolder than the rest, made their way to the foot of the stand. He took their offered flowers and kissed them on the cheeks. I can see them so clearly now, those young girls dancing down a long curve between thick hedges of black bodies and radiant faces, tossed caps, waved handkerchiefs — the mothers of tomorrow's France.

The Statue of Kleber in Strasbourg.

Just in front of the stand were massed the Zouaves, in khaki with the red fez, looking through the [illegible] air of the gray threatening day, like a distant field of poppies. One had in one's eyes the poppy-red and all the fantastic colors of the skirts, the blue and orange and red skirts, of the rich brocaded aprons, of the great Alsatian bows on the head, pink or green or black (ravens with pretty faces between wide wings) or a blend of many tints. They danced, and the tossing ribbons, the swing of skirts, the sheen of necks and cheeks, made them like flowers, a lovely dancing garden, row upon row of wandering blossoms. Among them were staid old men in remarkable top-hats and youths in white breeches and what I may best describe as coonskin caps, some afoot and some astride prancing horses; pastors and priests and Mayors of villages in red waistcoats and rows of brilliant buttons.

A wild, delirious band of lads cavorted by, their caps blossoming with flowers. They were conscripts freed from becoming part of the next German class. Their banners, their emblems, their devices touched one's heart, all of them souvenirs of France. Here's a group of old men in their regimentals and medals of 1870. The thing was so spontaneous, so simple, so ardent and so amazingly, for all picturesqueness, so amazingly real. I found myself repeating over and over: "This can't be taught to people; it is in their blood, in their hearts." An old French General who stood beside and heard the involuntary words smiled and nodded. He could not speak. There was a knot in his throat. His eyes were brimming. We were all caught in the spell of that emotional moment, all of us. For sheer beauty of body and spirit, I have never seen anything so lovely.

The last of them danced away—their head-dresses were deep pink, and as they streamed beyond in a long serpentine curve, they seemed a river of roses flowing seaward.

Le plébiscite est fait!

And just across the river, spanned by the great Kehl bridge, across the wide full-breasted Rhine, almost at the cast of a stone from us, lay Germany. I crossed that bridge one day to the extreme permitted point, where stood the German sentries, and looked a long time at that land silent and abased. Strange contrast, Strasbourg all flags and fêtes and wonders, Strasbourg freed; and just across the river within sound of our cheering, well-night, a nation despised, defeated, dishonored.

A lad of Strasbourg on the day of General Gouraud's entry, so his mother told me, went alone at the end of the great day to the cemetery. He found his grandfather's grave and placed on it a little cherished French flag. Stooping down he whispered, "Grandpère, ils sont là!

Yes, they are there!

Back from the Great War, a Canadian Soldier Tells of His Experiences and Prospects

"Bill will want to tell stories all the time about how he and Haig finished the war."

I'M what you might call a "hero." I've been to the front and over the top. There's scarcely anything just now that I couldn't have for the asking. But I'm willing to bet my g'ass eye that five years from now most people will be thinking me a nuisance. You'll probably point out how this war's different. And I'm willing to give my most precious possession, which is the glass eye aforesaid, against the least of yours, if five years from now you'll not only be utterly and entirely fed up, as the English say, on heroes, but if there aren't plenty of folks not afraid to say so out loud as well as think it.

Don't mistake me. I'm not grouching. I've had a square deal from everybody, and I'm not sore at finding my old job gone. I don't cherish any particular quarrel with the fellow who took it; he wasn't responsible, anyhow. I'm quite awake to the fact that there are other ways of serving your country besides getting killed, and that to these ways there attach different degrees of honor. But I'm not blind, and, believe me, when the boys begin to come home in force you'll find one thing you least expected. You'll find them different in most ways, but chiefly you'll find them seeing things heaps clearer than before, and not at all backward about speaking the blunt truth instead of camouflaging.

To go back to the beginning: I went over with the first Canadian bunch, joined up at Calgary in August, '14. Had a good job, too. Seems years ago! The Western boys, take them by and large, were a bright bunch, a kind of handpicked crowd of good sports and rough scrappers. What we went through before we got to the front was an earful. The later contingents had a smooth time alongside ours, what with the months we wasted at Valcartier and then that rotten Winter in the mud on Salisbury Plain. However, we got there in the end. The 10th, our crowd, got pretty well shot up right from the start, but I was one of the lucky ones. Always seemed to move my head when, if I'd kept it still, like God meant, it'd have got shot off. Switching over from time to time, as companies and then whole battalions were consolidated, I kept a whole skin. But I got mine eventually. Yes, Sir. It was coming to me, I guess, and finally I got it at Vimy Ridge.

Well, they've dug all the shrapnel out of my face now, and fitted me with a glass left eye. I had a swell time in hospital at Ramsgate, and here I am back in Canada again. The Maple Leaf forever, you bet! Still, I'd have liked to stay on in England a while longer, but there's no arguing with the High Command. Last week I was formally discharged from his Majesty's forces, and my cozy little pension began. The board kindly gave me a 35 per cent. disability. Think of it, seventeen and a half bones a month till death do us part, whether I work or not, get married, or stay single!

Can't I find a job? Sure I can, easy enough, too, because I'm a great war veteran. Some veteran, hey, aged 26? Ever look up what veteran means in the dictionary? But I don't want some kid's job like peddling pins, or bobbing up and down in a store elevator all decked out in some store uniform. I want a man's job, that wants a man's brains and not more than one eye.

Farming? Say, you "civvies" have got perfectly good intentions, but why do you persist in trying to make us chaps go farming? Why don't you go yourselves? If it's all it's said to be, and so important to keep up production and all that, it seems kind of bum patriotism trying to pass the buck. Greater production! We had our share. Don't misunderstand me. I'm a reasonable human being, but I can't quite see it. What's farming, anyway? After a guy's been living and sleeping, eating and playing, for three years with other guys all around, on every side, never out of sight, millions of 'em, you ask him to get out into the middle of the landscape, on a farm, with no company but his blooming ego, and not miss the old familiar faces. Why, you watch the next bunch of G. W. V.'s you see. They won't even go down street to buy a packet of smokes without the whole gang goes along.

You don't believe me when I say there's going to be an old soldier nuisance. Here's the way I dope it out. The guy who's fought for his King and country, or to make the world safe for democracy, or whatever it is he fights for, wants a job. Well? Does he want any old job that nobody else wants? He does not; he thinks he's entitled to the best, and so he is. He doesn't look upon a job as an accident, he says it's the least the country owes him. But there's one unlucky thing, all the best jobs are already held. When the war started some bosses promised to keep the fellows' jobs open when they enlisted. But they didn't know the war would last so long. Four years is a long time to keep a job open, and you can't blame them if they filled them up. Do you expect them to can the fellows they've taken on or promoted and hand the jobs back to soldiers on a silver plate?

But supposing I get a job. I don't know yet what I really do want, but I guess it'll come to an office job. That's about all I can do unless there's any openings in the movies. Or better make it some one else getting a job, otherwise you'll think I'm parading my ego. This old soldier, whom we'll call Bill, is started up as a ledger keeper, say. You got to remember, first of all, that for nearly four years Bill's been fighting. Which is to say, the only concern he's had in life is killing boches and not getting killed himself. After a while that loses its novelty, but it never gets to be routine. For the rest of life he's lost all interest, or else he finds it all doped out for him in the army rules.

In exchange for this he's got to observe a lot of regulations that strike him as piffle. He's got to rule off columns in red just this particular way or get a bawling out, and to pay attention to picayune stuff like filing systems and efficiency, and fool himself that something that happens is awfully important because it's out of the piffling routine, when he knows it isn't.

You got to remember that the way Bill looks at things isn't like you do. He's seen so many nasty things occur right in his immediate locality, like his pals getting their heads blown off, that he's kind of callous, kind of cynical and disillusioned about life. He's seen human life itself held so cheap that he figures it down to consisting of merely dodging death, with a sing-song or a smoke in between that a shell may end any second. Put him in an office and he's apt to make fun of filing systems and such like, which don't get him far with the office manager, who's been educated to believe filing systems are serious things and don't understand that Bill used to spend all his time in the trenches making fun of serious things and established customs. Add to this that Bill will want to tell stories all the time about how he and Haig finished the war, and will probably take up a lot of other people's time telling them. You can see a limit to that sort of thing in any office, hey?

Well, anyway, the war is now over some time. Things are back to what they used to be, or as near as they'll ever be. The big boss will one day go into session with himself, tell himself what a darned fool he was to ever hire returned soldiers, and bingo! Bill is out of his job without just knowing why. Or, maybe, if he's an honest gink, he's got discouraged because he sees he doesn't measure up to what they want and lost his self-respect, which is another way of saying that he gets the boot in God's good time.

The next thing that happens is that Bill drifts down to what is left of the Great War Veterans' Club, collects a few of his cronies, and pours his grievances out to them. He finds lots more in the same boat. When enough disgruntled guys are sworn in, there's trouble started somewhere, a riot outside some man's office that's fired a soldier, or raids on public meetings, or processions of G. W. V.'s. Pretty soon some slick politician who sees a chance for himself organizes a new political party composed of discontented ex-soldiers, and it's going to be a bold man to say nix to this party, even if they asked for the moon.

War's hell, ain't it? It sure does bring out the worst in human nature. When you join up you feel like Jan. 1 and you've sworn off everything, or just got confirmed in a little white nightie. You go around, oh, so different, with the rainbows a-playing round your head and wings sprouting under your vest. But it don't last—it don't last.

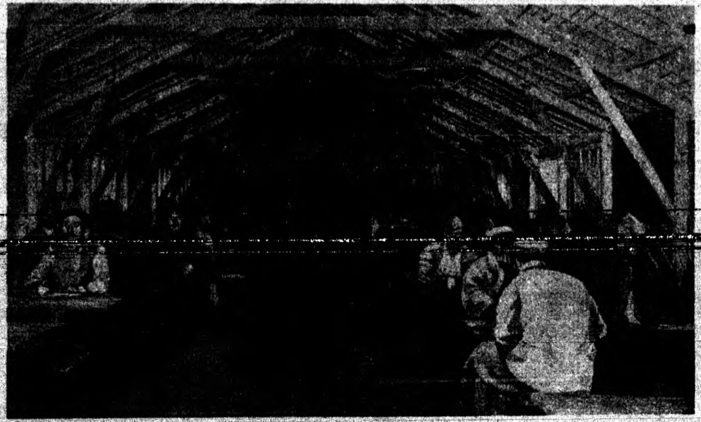
That's why I say, give the veteran a square deal, like you want yourself when you say the Lord's Prayer, no more, no less. None of us is a plaster saint, and if, when the boys come back, you sometimes think that they seem to have mean streaks in them, or that war hasn't ennobled them any, remember they're just average humanity. Suppose you'd been all so exploding with excitement that you nearly busted, and really did feel like a hero as you started running across No Man's Land, and then come to in a ward minus some useful part, and stayed in bed so long that you got to hate the sight of a white sheet till you died, or stuck around a convalescent home doing nothing for months. Guess you'd feel depressed, too, sort of at a loose end. And then, on top of it all, you gotta get out and hunt a job—you, that's mussing around in a mess of things you'd forgot the use of.

"I had a swell time in a hospital at Ramsgate."

Off Duty with the Poilu Between Battles

His Tastes Different from Those of the American Soldier---Some of the Things They Have Learned from Each Other



Interior of a Foyer Near the Front.

"THE Frenchman is not like the American. He has the idealism of a child and the individuality of an artist, which, essentially, he is."

This was the impression of the French soldier brought home by William Sloane Coffin, who ended a short visit to America last week and is now on his way back to France to resume the work of the Foyers du Soldat. Mr. Coffin is one of the directors of this branch of the Y. M. C. A. activities.

"It was in our appreciation of the fundamental difference between the American soldier and the French poilu that we could do for him what we did," he continued. "For instance, the American soldier, when he was on leave, wanted a big place to go to, where he could sit around and talk and sing, and where he could buy something to eat. Always, always the demand of the American boy is for cigarettes and sweets. The French poilu wanted these things, too, but they don't mean as much to him. He also wanted a place where he could go to after the rush and fire of the battle, but he wished that place to be beautiful—as far different from the life and scenes of the trenches as it could be. He didn't want to see a war trophy hung on the wall; he wanted to see a dash of color harmony that would remind him of home in some way.

"We had to meet that requirement, and we did. Every place turned over to us to be converted into a Foyer du Soldat, whether it was a dance hall, grain exchange, garage, or hole in the ground, was made as beautiful as human ingenuity could make it. Daniel Putnam Brinley was one of the artists whose greatest contribution to the happiness of the French soldiers was the beautifying of the surroundings.

"A chairmaker's shop would be given us to be turned into a foyer for the soldiers stationed in the town. The men who were adept with brush and paints would take it over. The bare stone walls would be covered with a heavy lining of paper. In every case an attempt was made to have the paper a pretty color. Windows would be built in to make the room light and cheery. We had no glass panes. They wouldn't have been much good if we had had them, anyway—most of the huts were so very near the front that the shock and the impulse of the shells would have broken them.

"Our men, most of them Beaux Arts men, would take sheets of cheap muslin and paint scenes upon them; scenes of Brittany or Normandy or any of the provinces of the country that the men in that special camp came from. These would be stretched across the window sash and serve both the purposes of windows and decoration. The French poilu loved these windows. He would sit before one of them for hours and enjoy the play of light and shadow across the hills and valleys that was the only visible expression of home to him.

"Besides the decorations of the windows, every foyer had a big painting at one end of the room, covering in many cases the entire wall. Here, too, there was no attempt to depict the glories of war. The motive was always exactly the reverse; something that would take the man's mind off the things that he had lived through for years. Near the painting an old-fashioned lamp would be hung, the kind that would be absolutely useless on the battlefield, but which was reminiscent of the crooked little streets of home, lit up by just such admittedly inefficient lights. The walls were paneled, or at least had the appearance of being paneled. Between the windows and along the wall spaces we hung up colored posters or, those lacking, bits of color work done by our own men. The aim in everything undertaken was one of contrast, of giving to these war-worn soldiers something that would bring a light into their eyes and a smile upon their faces. The foyer meant home to them; at least, it was the nearest thing to a home that they could possibly get, situated as they were.

"After a battle, or during a leave period, they would come pouring into the place by the hundreds. There was not much noise. It may be queer, my saying that. We Americans had been so accustomed to thinking of the Frenchman as an individual who was continually bubbling over with spirits, who was continually going off into rhapsodies about patriotism and art and things like that. But he doesn't. He is a very quiet sort of a person, quiet and sincere and serious. It may be, of course, that the war has done that to him, has robbed him of his youthful spontaneity. At all events, he would come in, look about him, smile happily at the bits of things that pleased him, and then sit down and just live in the atmosphere of the place. He didn't sing much and hardly ever in chorus.

"A First-Class Fighting Man"—Typical Senegalese Soldier. At Close Quarters These Men Drop Their Guns and Fight with Their Big Knives. Many of Them Patronize the Foyers.

"A Frenchman can't sing in chorus. The effect of his effort to do so is quite horrible. You take a group of American boys and it isn't very long before you get them off singing one of the old songs of home. They love singing en masse. You take a similar number of French boys and try the same stunt, and it doesn't work. But—and here's where the Frenchman shows the difference in temperament of which I spoke—if there is one among them that can sing, he will get up and do it. And if there is one among them that can play an accompaniment, he will get up and play it. Both will be interested, not in expressing something that will relieve their feelings or the feelings of the poilus in the room, but in the artistic rendition of the song.

"Another thing: The Frenchman writes more letters than any other soldier in the war. You come into one of the Foyers du Soldat, and you do not find a group of men standing about and talking. They write, sheet upon sheet. This is true not only of the Frenchman of France, but of the Frenchman, so-called, living in the dependencies of France. The Senegalese, the Tahitan, the Moroccan, all of them ask for paper and pens. Often it happens that when sheets and pen and ink are before them they sit embarrassedly and don't know what to do with them. There are things they want to say, things that they want their relatives back home, wherever home is, to know, but they can't do it. The French poilu—the real poilu of France, I mean—usually lends a hand, and before very long a letter is dispatched to some little hamlet in Senegal that had never before seen a French postmark. Arrangements have been made in Senegal and all the other territories, for that matter, to enable the family of a soldier to go to some place where his letter can be read and interpreted.

"To the almost half-savage Senegalese, the foyer has been an education. These men are fierce fighters. The call of the chase of the enemy, be it man or animal, is primitive in them. This very phase of temperament gave the Senegalese a peculiar part in the war. He was never used as a trench soldier. What I mean is, he was never kept in the trenches for any length of time, awaiting the slow and strategic manoeuvres of the leaders in command. He would have chafed and fretted under this discipline. The Senegalese was primarily used to make up shock troops. When an attack was planned he was in the van, and won by force of savagery. When it was a matter of a surprise attack he was in his element. Fierce and angry warfare was the thing that tried his mettle. The war, however, was not carried on by a series of surprise attacks. So, for a good part of the time the Senegalese was resting. With him it was either fight or rest. The Foyer du Soldat answered the problem as to what was to be done with him during his period of relaxtion. There was not a little danger that, drunk with the spirit of the fight, he would be led to do reckless things when he got back behind the lines. The first place he went to, however, after the battle was the hut. Once he was there, it was a safe bet that the atmosphere and influence of the place would counteract the effect of the war plains. He liked the pictures, he liked the paintings, and he liked the quiet homeliness of the room.

"There was one thing that especially appealed to him as well as to the French poilus. That was learning how to play baseball and, mark this, learning how to play it so that he could better vanquish his enemy. When the Frenchman or Senegalese first began throwing hand grenades, he threw them with a sort of side motion, the kind that usually draws out a howl of derision from an American boy when his sister tries to pitch a baseball. Over at the foyers there were men who could make the eyes of the Senegalese pop out in admiration of the accuracy of aim and direction with which they threw the baseball. It was not long before teams were organized for the sole purpose of learning how to pitch a ball into the catcher's hand. We had one man, Nelson, who did nothing but catch balls from 7:30 in the morning until 8 at night. After three months of this he was sent home, sore and lame. But the poilus and the Senegalese soon gloried in their ability to throw a ball plump into the middle of a mit at a distance of fifty meters, and, what was more to the satisfaction of the Senegalese at that time, they learned to hurl a grenade plump into the middle of the enemy trench.

"Every foyer has its library. That branch of the work is directly under the control of the French Government. It is amusing to see the rules that govern the types of books included among the 200 alloted to each hut. Of the 200 volumes, 100 are to fall under the class of general literature, sixty under the head of general education, and forty in the classification of propaganda. Of the 100 in the first class, 30 per cent. are romances; 20 per cent., gay authors; 15 per cent., stories of adventures; 10 per cent., classical authors; 10 per cent., literary works, and 15 per cent., travel and memoirs. Every foyer, no matter how small and no matter where it is situated, has this allotted number of books in the proportion given.

"There is no attempt made at moralizing or uplifting. The French soldier has been through too much to need anything of that sort. There are, however, some handsome posters on the walls designed to bring a smile to the face of the poilu and remind him of the things that he owes to himself. Of one, especially, the boys were very fond. It ran to the effect of 'whenever you want to say something about a woman, think of your mother, sister, wife, or sweetheart, and then say nothing foolish.'

"At present there are more than 800 Foyers du Soldat scattered over France, Belgium, Saloniki, Alsace-Lorraine, and that part of Germany under allied control. The building that houses one in Metz was originally a Soldatenheim or Soldiers' Home for German soldiers. These Soldatenheime of the Germans were immense edifices, palatial in appearance and appurtenances. It was only in the large cities, however, that the German soldier on leave could go to a place comparable to one of our foyers or huts. There was nothing like the foyer immediately behind the German lines.

"The French Government has asked us to continue the work of the Foyers du Soldat. The most optimistic prophet does not expect to have less than one million Frenchmen still in arms at the end of this year. The problem is to keep those men amused and interested. Today the proportion of men to women between the ages of 20 and 30 years is one to four. The French Government has asked us to lend our efforts to help train its men at arms, physically especially, to aid in assuring the country of a strong and healthy stock to build up the future of the race.

"Another problem to be met by the foyers is the training and education of the Moroccan troops. These men, half-savage as they are, have learned during this war how to kill quickly and effectively. To send them back with that knowledge alone would be foolhardy, to say the least. They must be taught that civilization means something more

"The French poilu today has the highest regard for the American soldier. It pleased him to see our men come over and unobtrusively take orders from Frenchmen who were in many cases inferior to him in rank and education. He felt that it was fine for the American to understand that the French, having been in the war so many years, knew the game of battle better than the American. All that the Frenchman had read about the idealism of President Wilson seemed to him to be impersonated in the American soldier. The point I am trying to bring out is this: We don't want the Frenchman's view of the American to change. The American soldier under no restraint of strict discipline might do foolish and rash things. Part of our present work is to counteract any change in the friendly sentiments existing between French and American soldiers, though taking a real and serious interest in the rehabilitation of French manhood by means of American methods of physical, hygienic, and educational training."

Unpublished Swinburne Sonnet on ex-Kaiser

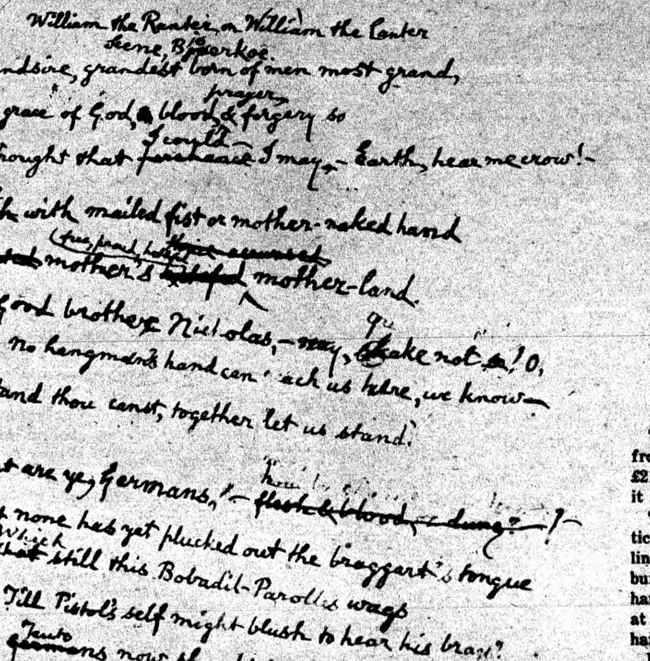
Fourteen Years Ago the Famous English Poet Upbraided Germany for Not Ridding Herself of Her Emperor, the "Swaggerer"

IN an unpublished sonnet, addressing the German people, Algernon Charles Swinburne called for justice upon the "swaggerer" Kaiser nearly fourteen years ago.

The original autograph manuscript has been purchased by an American collector, and makes interesting reading now. For the English poet calls on all Teutons to spurn their braggart ruler, "seeing how long late justice lags." The poem is dated July 31, 1905. "What are ye, Germans," Swinburne asks, "that none has yet plucked out the swaggerer's tongue?"

The sonnet is entitled "William the Ranter on William the Canter." William the Ranter is the William Hohenzollern, who lately ceased to reign as King of Prussia and German Emperor, and William the Canter is his grandfather, whose ill deeds the Ranter boasts. The poem first presents William II. as setting forth to Czar Nicholas of Russia how he glories in his grandsire's bloody conquests, and at the same time uttering a threat against England, his mother's country. Then the poet himself speaks to the people of Germany.

The poem was called forth specifically by the Kaiser's having sent a bombastic congratulatory message to the Czar, wherein he announced, "The Admiral of the Atlantic salutes the Admiral of the Pacific." The sonnet is as follows:



William the Ranter on William the Canter
Scene, Björkoe.
"My grandsire, grandest born of men most grand,
By grace of God, blood, prayer & forgery so
Wrought that ~~forsooth~~ I could I may — Earth, hear me crow! —
Smite ~~Crush~~ with mailed fist or mother-naked hand
My ~~hated~~ mother's (free, proud, hateful) ~~this accursed~~ ~~[illegible]~~ mother-land.
Good brother Nicholas, — nay, quake not! O,
No hangman's hand can reach us here, we know —
If stand thou canst, together let us stand."
What are ye, Germans, — ~~flesh & blood, or dung?~~ !
That none has yet plucked out the braggart's tongue
Which ~~That~~ still this Bobadil-Parolles wags
Till Pistol's self might blush to hear his brags?
All Teutons ~~Germans~~ now should have one foot forth-flung
To spurn him, seeing how ~~one how~~ long late justice lags.

Manuscript of Swinburne's Sonnet on William Hohenzollern, in the Famous Poet's Handwriting.

"My grandsire, grandest born of men most grand,
By grace of God, blood, prayer, and forgery so
Wrought that I could—I may—Earth, hear me crow!—
Smite with mailed fist or mother-naked hand
My mother's free, proud, hateful mother-land.
Good brother Nicholas—nay, quake not! Oh,
No hangman's hand can reach us here, we know—
If stand thou canst, together let us stand."
What are ye, Germans—men by shame unstrung—
That none has yet plucked out the swaggerer's tongue
Which still this Bobadil-Parolles wags
Till Pistol's self might blush to hear his brags?
All Teutons now should have one foot forth-flung
To spurn him, seeing how long late Justice lags."

The manuscript poem was purchased from a London dealer July 31, 1905, for £21. The American collector who bought it states:

"It is somewhat interlined, and I notice that three or four lines have interlineations in pencil. But I know Swinburne's handwriting, and they are in the handwriting of Swinburne, and the date at the bottom in pencil is also in his handwriting."

In connection with this poem and the braggart flourish that called it forth, it is interesting to recall that a similar bombastic message from William I. to his Queen, Augusta, after a terrible defeat and slaughter of the French in 1870, inspired the famous sarcastic lines in Punch:

"Praise be to God, my dear Augusta,
We've had another awful buster;
Ten thousand Frenchmen sent below,
Praise Him from whom all blessings flow."

Why I Was Called the Best Posted Man in Our Town

A Story of Quick Dividends from the Venture of a Thoughtless Dime on a Dull Evening

A RAINY night in a strange town—do you know how lonesome it can be?

Even the bright hotel lobby, peopled with the usual prosperous-looking crowd of men and women, seemed cheerless. I had hoped to get a train out that afternoon and be home in time for breakfast the next day; but the business of my trip had delayed me and I was doomed to an idle evening with the weather dead against my seeing a show or a movie.

Two or three men, lone hold-overs like myself perhaps, stood at the magazine stand buying or turning the leaves of the late issues, eager to be entertained by any page that seemed interesting. I drew near the booth, gay with the colored covers of many publications, resigning myself to the only pastime left me. Well, it would not be the first time that I had obliterated time, space, and the four bare walls of a hotel room in the forgetfulness of a magazine story, although invariably the next day I wondered what it all had been about and why I hadn't gone to bed in the first place and had a good sleep.

I selected one of the fiction magazines, an old acquaintance, for my evening's diversion. Close at hand, on the cover of a weekly, my eye was caught by the caption, THE MOST MOMENTOUS WEEK IN HISTORY. This might be something worth while, I thought, and I bought a copy in case the stories failed to amuse. In my room, a few moments later, I had made myself comfortable for an evening's reading.

The stories failed me miserably. I read a paragraph or two from a half dozen of them, but I felt no inclination to go on. That phrase "The Most Momentous Week in History" kept recurring to my mind. Surely these were great days we were living through. It was a privilege to be even an observer of such tremendous events. World history for generations to come was being influenced and shaped by the decisions and happenings of each hour.

I picked up the weekly and opened it. I had heard of "The Independent" for as long as I could remember, and knew it ranked high among the influential and necessary publications of the country, but curiously enough this was the first time I had ever bought a copy or taken time to look into one.

From the first five minutes with "The Independent" my evening's entertainment ceased to be a problem. In fact, the whole experience became delightful. I was fascinated, stimulated, and more absorbed than I ever had been in the reading of anything.

I gained new viewpoints on a dozen things of national and world importance. It put me straight on recent points of diplomacy and showed me the wonderfully interlocked military and diplomatic and economic pressure that brought the war to a victorious end. It told me concisely and impartially the biggest events of the past week in such a way as to show the real significance of each, something which my daily newspaper had failed to do.

Everything seemed immensely more interesting when I knew the motives and the probable results. It also gave me a number of brief reviews of new books about which I had been curious. Its pictures, cartoons, maps and contributed articles all helped to make my evening profitable, enjoyable.

I put the copy of "The Independent" carefully in my grip when I packed the next morning. There were several things in it I wanted to show my wife. And one short article in particular settled a question that my boy, a high-school student, had asked me just a few days before. At the time I had floundered about and finally put him off, hoping he would not see that I didn't know. And I had been impressed with certain business suggestions that this remarkable publication contained. One of them promised to solve an old office problem of ours. I had had more than my ten cents' worth of diversion out of that "Independent Weekly" in one evening, but if there hadn't been another copy available I would not have taken $5 for it.

It was a new surprise the way they enjoyed "The Independent" at home. My wife, finding the section headed "How to Study This Number," put the publisher's idea into practice. These tremendous events we had read about only casually—probably the most important things that would happen during our lifetime—were given the attention they deserved. We began to realize that such knowledge was essential to people who pretended to any degree of education and everyday culture.

The family was united for sending in a year's subscription. That was not long ago and yet I find today that "The Independent" fills an important need in my scheme of life. It takes the place of most of the reading matter I used to consider necessary, and with which I have dispensed without the loss of a single pleasure. "The Independent" has helped to transform our home conversation, making it a hundred times more interesting and pleasurable. Every one of us, whether at home or outside, has something to talk about. We are confident in the truthfulness of our statements and we delight in the ability to express our ideas and opinions with force and conviction back of them.

It surprises me when I think how my circle of friends, both business and social, has increased since I became an "Independent" reader. Yet it is the most natural thing in the world that this should have come about. I am able to converse with people in such a way as to really contribute something to the occasion, whatever it may be. I find myself at ease on questions whose mention would have barred me from the discussion in former days. And, better yet, I have gained for my own private use a new perception of national and international problems, helping me to vote intelligently and to form my own opinions from my knowledge of the facts, for "The Independent" really is independent and has no axes to grind or grievances to push. Its strength is in its free, unbiased reflection of the most progressive American spirit.

Besides the new friends I have made—and no man in business or the professions can have too many—I have found it easier for me to make valuable acquaintances. And they have certainly helped. Whether because of the new business that my firm has gained through my efforts or because of the success in our daily work of my efficiency suggestions my income is surely in the [illegible].

I gladly acknowledge the value of the monthly National Efficiency Section of "The Independent" devoted to business, personal and national efficiency. At home, "The Independent" has given us some big helps on the plans of that house we expect to build some day. "The Countryside" Section, devoted to sensible and efficient living, better homes, better rooms, better gardens, better roads, and better towns, is published in the first issue of each month.

It is useless for me to try to tell the whole "Independent" story. Seventy years ago it was Abraham Lincoln's "favorite paper" and the leading champion of the movement to free the slaves. It has stood for just such great ideals ever since—Woman Suffrage, Unity of Religious Work, The League of Nations. Its contributors include many of the Presidents and the big men in the public life of the world, popes, premiers and kings. Every member of President Wilson's cabinet has written for The Independent as well as Ambassadors Gerard, Penfield and Morgenthau.

The other day, while I was lunching with a half dozen friends, a question arose as to the reason for a certain decision on the part of a government official. Several voiced opinions but no two agreed. The man next to me turned to the others and said:

"Ask Clayton here if you want to settle that question. He's the Best Posted Man in Town."

It was a sincere tribute, and I am proud enough of it. I believe that I have best showed my appreciation of The Independent by telling my experience just as it happened.

He is now in Europe. The Editor of The Independent is peculiarly well fitted for this mission.

He was one of the two or three Americans who attended the Second Hague Conference besides the official delegation.

He brought together the group of distinguished Americans who founded the League to Enforce Peace.

He is a director of the Church Peace Union, found[illegible]

He was the first [illegible] Editor to visit the entire battle front of Europe as a guest of the British Government.

Mr. Holt has lectured throughout the United States on the great principles of world peace. From the beginning he has insisted on a peace with victory and a peace enforced by military and naval police power.

The Independent was the first periodical to predict the downfall of autocracy and the crash of empires, in its leading editorial entitled "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," which appeared August 10, 1914, four days after the World War was declared.

Mr. Holt's editorial in The Independent was the first proposal made after the war began to establish a League of Nations.

How that League of Nations took actual form in the first session of the Peace Conference in Paris is graphically described by Mr. Holt in a cabled article appearing in The Independent of February 15.

While at Paris, Mr. Holt, in addition to keeping the readers of The Independent in touch with the developments of the Peace Conference, will also serve on Committees sent to the Peace Conference by the League to Enforce Peace, the Church Peace Union and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

MR. WALPOLE DESCRIBES RUSSIA IN REVOLT

"The Secret City" a Series of Vivid Pictures, Giving an Avowedly English View—Latest Fiction by Harold Bindloss, Louis Tracy, Mr. Chamberlain, and Others

THE SECRET CITY. By Hugh Walpole. George H. Doran Company. $1.60 net.

TO the western world Russia and the Russians have always been a puzzle. We have blamed and admired and condemned and idealized, but never understood. And we were never, it would seem, further from any real understanding than we are today, when from an intellectual puzzle Russian and the Russians have suddenly developed into a no less intellectual, but very practical and imperious, problem. This problem Mr. Walpole does not pretend nor even attempt to solve; it is not one of the least among the many merits of his new novel, "The Secret City," that it quite frankly portrays Petrograd and certain of its inhabitants as they appeared to an Englishman, avowing, moreover, that they would assuredly have seemed otherwise to a Russian.

The Englishman who tells the story and through whose eyes and ears we see and hear it all is John Durward, that same John Durward who moved through "The Dark Forest." And, indeed, this novel is in more ways than one a continuation of the earlier book, so that it will not be altogether easy for those who have not read the first to comprehend certain portions of the second. As that presented Russia in the comparatively early days of the war, so does this present Russia in the months just preceding, and the few weeks just following, the revolution. Alexei Petrovitch Semyonov, the strong and cynical and sinister, plays an important, perhaps the most important, part in this second book, while Marie, though dead, lives on through her influence over two men, and is to a great extent the force which brings about the final, extraordinary tragedy. Against a clearly drawn and splendidly colorful background of place and period the characters stand out, sharply defined and individual, yet also typical. Nicolai Leontievitch Markovitch, dreamer and weakling, yet in his feeble way a patriot, one who had a great vision of Russia, who believed fervently in the revolution and suffered terribly when the glorious beginning degenerated into an orgy of talk, with much chatter about "Democracy, * * * Freedom, * * * the Brotherhood of Man; * * * Nothing so small and trivial as Russia!" is a pathetic, ludicrous, yet tragic figure. One of the talkers, Boris Grogoff, "personification of the disease from which Russia was suffering," ignorant, egotistical, cruel, friend of Lenine and coiner of the high-sounding phrases beloved of the mob, is among the dwellers in the Markovitch flat, which is the scene of so much of the action, while to Durward's own lodging on an island in the Neva comes at times the outcast called "the Rat"—thief and murderer and worse, yet a creature of a kind of "amiable rascality" who parts from Durward with the intimation that "On the back of our glorious revolution I rise from crime to crime." Though the book ends while the revolution is still young and some time before the [illegible] sees in the Rat a symbol of that which was even then on its way, and has now arrived.

Picture after picture of Petrograd during those fateful weeks passes quickly before our eyes. We see the apparently simple and peaceful beginning, when to a Russia in the frame of mind expressed by Nina, "Don't you see we're all so disappointed with ourselves that nothing matters?" a Russia bewildered, turning for help in her extremity first this way and then that—first to the Czar, who lost "the greatest opportunity, perhaps, ever offered to man"—a Russia suffering and betrayed by her own Generals and dignitaries, there appeared a vision of a realized, triumphant Utopia. Before us move the processions; we see the cheering, laughing, joyous people, and feel the pathos of their happiness in our knowledge of that which is so swiftly to follow. Then quickly the crowds break up into little groups "arguing at every street corner as to how they intend to arrange a democratic peace for Europe," while on the frontier the German menace grows stronger and yet more strong, and within the city itself the German agents do their work of moral destruction. And yet Mr. Walpole makes us feel that once the débâcle had begun nothing could have prevented its completion, for the reason that its causes were inherent in the Russian character. He pays, indeed, a glowing tribute to the English Ambassador, Sir George Buchanan, "not only a great courtier and statesman, but a great gentleman, whose efforts were in a measure foiled by the fact that those who shouted about leading the democracies of the world "never even began to understand the other democracies." For "whatever Russia may do, through repercussion, for the rest of the world, she remains finally alone * * * apart, mysterious."

But amid all the changes and all the turmoil the individual life goes on. The plot of the story centres around the occupants of the Markovitch flat, and its heroine is Vera, wife of Nicolai Markovitch, an intensely proud woman, strong and self-reliant and independent, caring little for others' opinions, not needing their help—until that happens which causes the breakdown of her pride. Durward believed her to be strong; she declared herself weak—declared that what he called her nobility was in truth only the result of "our weakness, our national idleness." And she never had the strength effectually to combat her uncle, the implacable Semyonov, who pursued his tortuous, ruthless, extraordinary plan to the very end, and so won the strangest of victories. Based on a kind of double triangle, the story tells how the two sisters, women quite unlike in character, fell in love with the same man. He loved one of them, the elder, already married to a man for whom she had only kindliness and pity, but who adored her. Semyonov ends one part of the complication, and another is solved by Henry Bohun, the young Englishman whose arrival at Petrograd opens the book, a boy with "the soul of a knight." This story part of the book,

PRESIDENT WILSON AS HE REALLY IS

Difficulties That Stand in the Way of a Genuine, Impartial Interpretation as Shown in Mr. A. Maurice Lowe's Agreeable Work

WOODROW WILSON. An Interpretation. By A. Maurice Lowe, M. A. Little, Brown & Co., 1918.

ACCEPTING Mr. Lowe's sub-title, "An Interpretation," as an avowal of his intent, we must frankly say at the outset that his volume embodies rather the improvisations of the encomiast than a literal rendering of the original text. He pictures Mr. Wilson—in a way Mr. Wilson himself least of all men would wish to be pictured—as a grand and superior being standing aloof from the people, a man self-appointed to be the people's guide and teacher in morals, in law, in right conduct; he dwells much upon the President's infallible certainty of judgment, although he does with sorrow admit that once there was an error. He would have us believe that in his very youth Mr. Wilson consecrated himself to these high tasks and that the ideals then formed in his mind have never ceased to be his inspiration. Fortunately, Mr. Lowe begins with the President's university training. Had he started with the happy days of childhood, we may be sure as we turned the earlier pages of his volume we should have had sight of Demosthenes upon the seashore seeking out suitable pebbles to cure his defect of speech; we should have imagined reverent Ocean stilling the tumult of its waves to a murmur lest their roar drown the eloquence of the youthful orator. What the Rev. Jared Sparks did for Washington when he placed upon his brow that crown of perfection and priggishness that so long betrayed the American people into such a profound misunderstanding of the Father of His Country, Mr. Lowe in a considerable degree, but in a different manner, for his book is very agreeable reading, has done for Woodrow Wilson.

[illegible] as an interpretation of the President to the American people, for they already understand him very well; as a defense or justification of his policies it is unnecessary, for he needs none. Mr. Wilson's greatness is established. It is secure. Without great ability and extraordinary capacity for leadership he could never have come to the place he now holds, we may say the very foremost place among the statesmen of the nations now in conference at Paris for the settlement of the momentous questions growing out of the war. Mr. Wilson's profound understanding of the rules of justice that must guide the decisions of the Conference, his devotion to principle put him beyond the need of apologetic or justifying interpretation. And the American people prefer to look upon their President as a man, endowed with high gifts, but with few, at least, of those failings common to us all, liable to error and not above confessing it—in short, a human being. Not awe but affection and profound respect is the feeling they would like to entertain for the President.

Americans will not easily be persuaded that Mr. Wilson gave up the practice of law because "he found himself in competition with men of dubious morals." That is a poor compliment for the multitudes of upright practitioners who persist in the law notwithstanding the occasional presence of a black sheep at the bar. Nor can they imagine Mr. Wilson as a university student at twenty-three offering to a fellow-student the manuscript of a treatise upon which he was engaged "not to invite criticism" but "perhaps simply for his approval." And inasmuch as Mr. Wilson was content to devote twenty-five years "to pedagogical work," it is hard to believe that even at the university he had firmly resolved to fit himself for a great public career, and with his eyes steadily fixed on that goal had prepared himself to attain it.

The most interesting part of Mr. Lowe's book is his "interpretation" of Mr. Wilson's relation to the war. He has two explanations of the President's enduring patience under the great affronts put upon us by Germany. One is that he was a convinced "pacifist," that word being used not at all with the connotation of obloquy it acquired in the progress of the war, but meaning that, like all Americans, he was a lover of peace. The second explanation is that the American people were divided, not into two, but into four, camps—the admirers of England, all strongly pro-Ally; those who still cherished old grudges against England and were supporters of Germany; the indifferent multitude, who felt that the war was none of our business; and those who by birth or blood were in sympathy with the Central Powers. In the President's firm belief that, if possible, this country should be kept out of the war, his interpreter [illegible] the explanation of all those acts and utterances of Mr. Wilson for which he was so much criticised by large numbers of his countrymen. He felt that at a time when so large a part of the world was at war it was the business of this great nation to keep itself out of the conflict to the end that somewhere there might be sanity and calmness of mind. All this is true enough and of common knowledge. The policy of neutrality, the supreme desire to keep the United States at peace, controlled Mr Wilson's speech and decisions after the sinking of the Lusitania; for that course there was the added reason that at that time the American people could not have been united for war.

To Mr. Wilson, in the early days of the war, it seemed, says Mr. Lowe, "that circumstances imposed upon him the duty of being the champion and guardian of neutrality." He continues:

> It was an error of judgment; frankly to be so recorded, perhaps the sole instance when Mr. Wilson's judgment was in error. Looking back now, it is easy enough to see, and still easier for the critic who plays with his facts to say, that Mr. Wilson could have been of greater service to mankind had he turned the thought of his countrymen toward war instead of trying to keep before them the thought of peace; had he at the first opportunity yielded to the pressure put upon him and had he done in 1915, when Germany gave abundant cause for war, what he was to do two years later; had he, in short, begun to arm with the first day of conflict. It is an easy thing to say, and also an unworthy thing.

Not so unworthy but that innumerable sober-minded Americans, not players with facts, believed with Theodore Roosevelt and Leonard Wood that, as a measure of common prudence, when the war broke out in Europe we should have begun at once to strengthen our army and navy. Mr. Lowe says that such military measures "would immediately have aroused the distrust and suspicion of both belligerents; uncertain whether the United States was to be counted as an enemy or as an ally." Germany, with good reason, might have been suspicious; it is a manifest absurdity to pretend that Britain could have had the faintest shadow of doubt as to our purpose. At the end of 1914 President Wilson had told Congress that "military preparedness was not a pressing question." In an address in this city on Jan. 27, 1916, he declared, without any beating about the bush, that he had changed his mind. "I would be ashamed if I had not learned something in fourteen months. The minute I stop changing my mind with the change of all circumstances of the world I will be a back number." Surely, it is not incumbent upon the interpreters or biographers of Mr. Wilson to be less frank and outspoken than he is himself. There is no need of timid reticence or gingerly evasion in these matters. Mr. Wilson knows that he has made mistakes. The public knows it, and has forgotten most of them. The candid course here would be the wiser one, and for that reason it seems to us that Mr. Lowe strives ineffectually in his labors with certain utterances of Mr. Wilson during the first two and one-half years of the war, certain phrases which we may be very sure he would have been glad to recall the instant he noted their effect upon the public mind. It is quite futile to attempt any palliation or explanation of these slips, "too proud to fight," "peace without victory," and a few others. It would be better to admit that Mr. Wilson should not have said these things, deplorably wrong as they were; but they count for little now when weighed in the scale against his later great constructive utterances that have made him a leader of the world's thought.

Exception will be taken, we are sure, to much that Mr. Lowe says in that chapter in which he treats Mr. Wilson as an

with its dramatic force, its many complications, and its effect of a constantly pursuing, resolute will to destroy, is absorbingly interesting. We do not always understand these people any more than we do those whom we meet every day, but we see and know them as Durward saw and knew them, and to us, as to him, they are intensely real, intensely alive. And so skillfully is the fictional part of the book interwoven with the historical that it is only because this historical portion represents a great deal of that perplexing question which is now so greatly to the fore in all our minds that it seems to dominate. For this is, we believe, Mr. Walpole's best novel, a finer book even than "The Dark Forest." Its descriptive passages are many of them superb; we get the sense of the strange and alien forces lying beneath the somewhat Europeanized surface of Petrograd in a truly remarkable way. And this is doubly important, because the people are so closely akin to their environment. It is quite beyond the limits of possibility to do more than touch, in the necessarily limited space of a review, on a very few of the interesting points in this long, though not too long, book. It is not, perhaps, an interpretation of Russia. Mr. Walpole himself states that "of Russia and the Russians I know nothing," but it is most certainly the report of an unusually intelligent observer, one who is able so to draw the thing he sees that others, too, can see it, and thereby at least be helped that far along the road to understanding, remembering always that vision of the quiet peasant who symbolizes, for Russia, the hope of her future.

THE BUCCANEER FARMER

THE BUCCANEER FARMER. By Harold Bindloss. With frontispiece. Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.50 net.

THOSE persons to whom the novels of Sir Walter Scott are more than so many names will perhaps remember how that energetic and ingenuous youth Quentin Durward once found considerable solace in the reading of an old tale which told how "a squire of low degree" loved and wooed "the King's daughter of Hungarie." But that same squire was not the first of the long succession of fiction heroes who, themselves of comparatively low degree, have loved maidens of birth and position, and it seems probable that the last one will not appear until the last novel is written. The most recent representative of this ancient and honorable line is Mr. Bindloss's "Buccaneer Farmer," Christopher Askew, called "Kit." Kit's father owned his farm of Ashton, which fact made him independent of the squire, Mr. Osborn, whose tenants the other farmers in the dale all were. Mr. Osborn was not a bad or heartless man, but he was weak, as well as reckless and stubborn, and much under the control of his clever and unscrupulous agent, Hayes. So there was trouble in the dale, and the Askews, father and son, became the leaders of the rebellious farmers. Matters were not made any easier or more pleasant by the friendship which had sprung up between the younger Askew and Osborn's charming daughter, Grace, a friendship which, on his side at least, quickly developed into love. The result of all this was that Kit accepted the offer of his prosperous uncle, Adam Askew, and went to join him in America.

The second part of the story has its scene laid in an unnamed South American republic on the shores of the Caribbean Sea. Kit plays his part in one of the customary South American revolutions, ably seconding his uncle, nicknamed by his South American acquaintances "the Buccaneer." Attempts at murder, bribery, and similar occurrences make Kit's life in the tropics a distinctly lively one, but presently he returns to England and the dale, heir to his now dead father and uncle, and consequently a very well-to-do young man. Then it is that Grace's brother Gerald takes a hand in the plot, one which threatens the Osborns with disgrace unless Grace agrees to buy their freedom at the price of a loveless marriage. But of course Kit intervenes and brings about the expected happy ending. Mr. Bindloss uses his well-worn material in a workmanlike way, building up an agreeable little story which holds the reader's attention fairly well.

WHITE MAN

WHITE MAN. By George Agnew Chamberlain. Illustrated by W. H. D. Koerner. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.75.

IF you enjoy "Nedra," by George Barr McCutcheon, and "The Wings of the Morning," by Louis Tracy, and other books of the two-on-a-desert-island variety, you will simply devour this new novel by George Agnew Chamberlain. "White Man" is the same fascinating froth of love, adventure, and bizarre contrasts that never fails to excite the appetite of the most jaded fiction devotee, the kind of book that will be consumed at one sitting and cast aside with a smile of real enjoyment. If you claim to be "literary" in your tastes, your grin may be a bit sheepish when you stop to analyze this story you have read with such absorption from cover to cover and realize that you have gotten nothing out of it. But if you confess to loving a rattling good yarn you will have no regrets when you close the book; for it certainly is a good yarn, with less stress on the sex element and more variety and originality of incident than in most stories of this sort. It abounds with thrills, not the least of which consists of an elephant hunt. Two chapters are devoted to the description of this event, and your interest is keyed to the ninth degree throughout. "White Man" is laid in Africa. There is no doubt that the author knows his country well enough to instill atmosphere; you feel that the episodes were part and parcel of the African jungle, and that they could not possibly have taken place anywhere else—as on some imaginary island, for instance—and it is because of the author's being so sure of his ground that the book is so fascinating. Even the illustrator seems to have been imbued with the spirit of this almost unknown land, with its pathless forests, its elephants and crocodiles, its formidable and childlike blacks, and his illustrations supplement the reader's imagination admirably.

The main plot is not new. A girl, on the eve of a marriage for money, hesitates and eventually marries for love, but Mr. Chamberlain gives it enough twists and turns to render it palatable. Andrea Pellor, daughter of an impoverished English nobleman, has come to Africa with her aunt to marry an elderly diamond magnate. She slips away from the dance at the hotel and runs out on the beach to be alone for a while. She sees her freedom and her youth departing and realizes that she is "on the verge of becoming forever a woman without a history." Then enters romance in its most modern form—an airplane. There is the plane poised on the white sands some distance from her and a goggled aviator making ready for a flight. A mad impulse seizes her. She rushes up to the tall stranger and cries, "Please, Mr. Man, take me with you!" He looks her over appraisingly and helps her into the machine without a word. In a moment they are off. Andrea expects to go for a spin and then be brought back to her aunt at the hotel, but a forced landing leaves these two utter strangers together in the African jungle. Thus it is that Andrea finds herself the unwilling guest of this mysterious, domineering American whom the blacks call "M'sungo," or "white man." We do not wonder that Andrea proceeded to forget the diamond magnate and transferred her affection to Robert Oddman Trevor, (the aviator's real name,) but we hope that she was really as "adorable" as Mr. Chamberlain insists and that it was not simply a case of proximity on the part of the "white man." The character of Trevor is more clearly and consistently drawn than Andrea. We feel that the author was not quite sure of his heroine.

About four years ago Mr. Chamberlain wrote a novel entitled "Home." The story was published anonymously and created quite a little interest. "White Man" is scarcely comparable with "Home," for the latter was a serious psychological study of a family, worked out with great care and detail. We know comparisons are odious, but we hope Mr. Chamberlain's next novel will be more like "Home."

DONALD McELROY

DONALD McELROY—SCOTCH-IRISHMAN. By W. W. Caldwell. Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co. $1.35.

THIS is a story of the part taken by Donald McElroy, a young Scotch-Irishman, in the Revolutionary War. But the author has done wisely to limit his canvas; he has tactfully not attempted to give a picture of the entire field of war—that would require an epic of the size of "War and Peace"—but has confined his hero to two separate campaigns under two separate Revolutionary heroes, General Morgan and George Rogers Clark. Washington and Jefferson both appear in these pages, but they are in no sense protagonists; of Washington we get merely a glimpse in a dignified description, with Jefferson the hero goes to Monticello to spend a day, and they have a discussion of Mac-

WEST POINT MANUAL OF DISCIPLINARY PHYSICAL TRAINING
By Lieut. Col. H. J. Koehler, U. S. A.
Director of Military Gymnastics, Swordsmanship, etc., United States Military Academy, Instructor at Training Camps, 1915-1918.
With a Foreword by NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

Secretary Baker testifies to amazing rapidity with which Col. Koehler's method, formed by years of experience at West Point, developed young men of every part of the country into military officers of impressive physical and moral adequacy. Wherever the object of physical training in schools, colleges, and other institutions is disciplinary and educational and not purely physical, this manual is easily adaptable and will prove exceedingly valuable.

THE MAN NOBODY KNEW

"The author of this clever story has taken advantage of one of the newer developments of war surgery. . . . Why is it so improbable to suppose that in one instance surgeons should have mended a soldier's face in such a way as to make it unrecognizable even to his closest friends? This, at least, is the premise of the present story. It was a clever idea, and the only danger was that the author might not be able to live up to its possibilities. He has, however, handled the idea skilfully from the start."

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

J. V. M.—Can you tell me what author back in the forties used the pseudonym "Lambert Lilly"? I have been informed that it was the Rev. F. L. Hawkes of this city.

"Lambert Lilly, Schoolmaster," was one of the pen names of the Rev. Francis Lister Hawkes, an eminent Episcopalian divine of this city. Dr. Hawkes was born in New Berne, N. C., in 1798, and died in this city in 1866. He also used the pseudonyms of "Frater, a Protestant Episcopalian," and "Uncle Philip." He wrote "The Early History of the Southern States," and had it published under the pen name "Lambert Lilly, Schoolmaster," in 1832.

Dreamthorpe

C. R. A.—What can you tell me about an old book called "Dreamthorpe," and its author, who, I am told, was a college professor? I have been unable to find it in the public libraries.

"Dreamthorpe" was published by L. C. Page & Co. of Boston. The firm is now known as Page & Co., and if the book is in print it can probably be had from that firm. The book first appeared in 1863. The author was Alexander Smith, who was born in Kilmarnock in 1829, and died at Wardle, near Edinburgh, in 1867. He was originally a pattern designer at Glasgow, but eventually became Secretary of the University of Edinburgh. He edited an edition of Burns's poems, and in 1853 published a book of poems, "A Life Drama and Other Poems," and in 1855, in collaboration with Sidney Dobell, "Sonnets on the Crimean War." In 1857 a book of "City Poems" appeared.

The Golden Dragon

J. D. B.—Some fifty years ago I read a very interesting book entitled "Up and Down the Irrawaddy." In it was a poem beginning:

> Maiden, look over the side with me
> And whom do thine eyes discern?

I have sought for the book, but have been unable to find it. Can you give me a clue to the book?

The book which our correspondent is seeking was "The Golden Dragon; or, Up and Down the Irrawaddy," written by Dr. John Williamson Palmer of Baltimore, Md., who died about 1907. The book was published in this city in 1853, and is doubtless now out of print. A full account of Dr. Palmer is printed in Vol. IV. of Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

LOUELLA D. EVERETT.—The poem, "Little House of Dreams," wanted by J. F. Dawson, (Jan. 19,) is by Claire Wallace Flynn. It has been set to music by John Metcalf. Sylvia Chatfield Bates used the verses in a short story entitled "The Little House of Dreams," which appeared in the September, 1913, Scribner's. The poem follows:

> Oh, little house with windows wide,
> A-looking toward the sea,
> How have you come, why have you come,
> To mean so much to me?
> Your walls within my heart are raised,
> And, oh, how strange it seems,
> My hopes but measure to your roof,
> Oh, little house o' dreams.
> Oh, little place where friends will come,
> The tangled world to flee,
> Brave little nook, where peace will bide,
> And hospitality.
> Pray, where's the magic wand I need
> To touch your slender beams,
> And change you to a home in truth,
> Oh, little house o' dreams?

"Are You in Earnest?"

Miss IDA K. JOHNSON.—I believe the lines "Are You in Earnest?" asked about in your issue of Jan. 5, are from Goethe, and are as follows:

> Lose this day loitering, 'twill be the same story
> Tomorrow, and the next, more dilatory;
> Each indecision brings its own delays,
> And days are lost lamenting over days.
> Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute!
> Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it.
> Only engage, and then the mind grows heated.
> Begin, and then the work will be completed.

Information about this quotation was also received from Calvin D. Wilson, Glendale, Ohio; Miss Edith Bradley, Hempstead, N. Y.; George Ross Leighton, Lyons, N. Y.; Caroline R. Horne, Saranac Lake, N. Y.; Basil Thompson, New Orleans, La., and Clara B. Miller, Orange, N. J.

APPEALS TO READERS

MISS MARY E. PHILLIPS.—May I submit to your many readers my quest for locating "The Oval Portrait," painted by Robert Matthew Sully, schoolmate and lifelong friend of Edgar Allan Poe? This canvas inspired the poet's story of that name, first issued in Graham's Magazine April, 1842. By a descendant of the artist I am advised that this portrait, with other Sully paintings, was taken from the home of his daughter during civil war raids in Virginia, and was later seen in the home of the late General Sickles in this city by a mutual friend. General Sickles's family have no definite knowledge concerning this picture, but think it was disposed of at private sale. The Oval Portrait represents a young girl in a low-neck gown, with a blue ribbon about her neck, upon which is a locket she is holding in her hand.

"Mothers' Sons"

M. D.—May I inquire through your columns if any one can tell me whence the following lines were taken? They appeared about a year ago in one of the popular magazines:

> Mothers' sons! Mothers' sons!
> And still they passed with kits and guns,
> Mothers' sons, mothers' sons.

Red Roses

A. L. R.—May I inquire through THE BOOK REVIEW whether any reader can give the author and complete poem beginning:

> The roses were red at the window,
> And sweet with the mild May weather,
> And close to the bloom inside of the room
> Sat mother and child together.
> And the mother was rocking the babe on her breast,
> And they both were rocking together.
> And soft through the curtain of roses,
> That the roses could not smother,
> A beam of light all golden bright
> Came to the child and the mother.

Time Is Eternity

Mrs. E. A. CHITTENDEN.—Can any of your many readers tell me the author of and where I can find the following lines:

> There is no end to the sky,
> And the stars are everywhere;
> And time is Eternity,
> And the here is over there;
> For the common deeds of the common day
> Are singing bells in the faraway.

"The Tailor in the Pitcher"

D. B.—Will some reader kindly give the origin of the saying, "The tailor has gone into the pitcher," meaning that the man had died. I have heard that it originated in Scotland, but have not been able to verify it.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

WILLIAM ARCHER, who first won fame in both England and America as a dramatic and literary critic and a writer of penetration and skill by championing the then unpopular Ibsen a quarter of a century ago, has written a little book about President Wilson which Henry Holt & Co. will publish in the United States this week under the title "The Peace President." The several chapters will deal with the successive phases of Mr. Wilson's career.

Edward S. Martin, at the request of Mrs. Choate, is at work upon the biography of the late Hon. Joseph H. Choate and would be glad to communicate with any who have letters from Mr. Choate which they would be willing to intrust to him for use in the volume or for his information. All such letters can be sent to him in care of Charles Scribner's Sons, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dr. William G. Norman Guthrie's "The Religion of Old Glory" is announced for publication in the Spring by the Doran Company. A pageant made from it is to be given on Washington's Birthday at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, in the lower east side of New York City.

A book by Samuel Gompers on "American Labor and the War" is announced for February publication by the George H. Doran Company.

The Hispanic Society of America is about to publish a collection of Spanish masterpieces of poetry rendered into English by the older and newer English poets. In this "Hispanic Anthology," of which Mr. Thomas Walsh is the collector and editor, practically all the ancient authors will be well represented, while it will contain a larger culling from modern and living Spanish poets than has heretofore appeared in English. The "Modernista" poets, especially those of South America, will be particularly well represented.

The Houghton Mifflin Company will have Eleanor H. Porter's new novel, "Dawn," ready early next month. The hero is a blind boy who goes down into the blackness of despair but finds the dawn of hope and victory in work for soldiers blinded in battle.

A collection of eight essays by the late Hamilton Wright Mabie not heretofore published in book form will be brought out this week by E. P. Dutton & Co. under the title "Essays in Lent." They comprise editorials written by him for The Outlook at the beginning of Lent through several years.

Something said to be both clever and unique is promised by the J. B. Lippincott Company under the name of "Tin Can Toys," by Edward Thatcher, in which, among various other achievements, "Canning the Kaiser" is literally accomplished. Mr. Thatcher's idea recently was practically demonstrated in New York City before the Art Alliance of America. Its primary purpose is for use in occupational therapy.

The Marshall Jones Company will change the title of its forthcoming book of cartoons by Kirkland H. Day from "Kirk's Cartoons," as first announced, to "Camion Cartoons." Mr. Day was a member of the Mallet Reserve and is now serving with the American Army of Occupation.

Dr. Henry van Dyke has founded a permanent prize fund to be awarded to especially meritorious students at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis. During the war he served as a chaplain in the navy with the rank of Lieutenant Commander and, not wishing to accept compensation for his services, he used the money which the regulations demanded should be paid to him to form the nucleus of this prize fund.

The Century Company announces the early publication of a novel of the mysterious-crime kind by a new author, Mrs. W. H. Thayer, who calls the story "The Mystery of the 13th Floor." The author is a New York business woman, who wrote the book by way of evening recreation after her workday in her office.

Eleanor Gates, whose "Poor Little Rich Girl" and "The Biography of a Prairie Girl," and other books have been widely read, is employing the leisure of a long convalescence from the influenza in putting the finishing touches upon another story about a little girl.

"Goat Feathers" is the title of a new skit by Ellis Parker Butler which Houghton Mifflin Company will bring out in book form early in March. In size and appearance the little volume will resemble that "Pigs Is Pigs" venture which made Mr. Butler famous and it is concerned with those people who go through life gathering "goat feathers"—that is, who are so allured by their avocations that they neglect their vocations.

Early next month the Holts will publish a novel, "Martin Schuler," by Romer Wilson, a new author, which is said to be causing much talk in London this Winter. It deals with musical life in Germany, but presents a very different picture of it from that which has been given in most musical novels about Germany. It shows German musical society just before the war as extravagant, gluttonous, immoral, and worshipful of material things.

A new book, by James Lane Allen, "Emblems of Fidelity," which is described as "a comedy in letters," will be published on March 15 by Doubleday, Page & Co.

Boni & Liveright expect to have Upton Sinclair's new story, "Jimmie Higgins," ready for publication in March. It portrays the life and experiences of a young American toiler who does not agree with the anti-war Socialists of this country and goes across the ocean to fight with the forces against Germany.

"The Book of Lincoln," which the George H. Doran Company has just brought out, shows that the immortal war President of the United States was the fifth Abraham Lincoln and the seventh generation of the Lincoln family in America. The first of the name to cross the Atlantic was Samuel Lincoln, son of Edward Lincoln, gentleman, of the County of Norfolk, who was apprenticed to a weaver and mariner, and afterward came to America in 1637, living first at Salem and afterward at Hingham, Mass.

Another book about Abraham Lincoln, "The Soul of Ann Rutledge," by Mrs. Babcock, which the J. B. Lippincott Company will have ready in a week or two, is a novel about his youthful experience in love into which the author, it is said, has woven some new historical material. She has endeavored to make the central figure of Lincoln a faithful portrayal of the Emancipator, and, while she was writing the story, in order to surround herself with the atmosphere and feeling of the pioneer times, she withdrew from civilization and lived in a rude log cabin in the forest, out of which there came to her ears the occasional call of a wolf.

OUR REPUBLIC TRIUMPHANT

OUR REPUBLIC TRIUMPHANT. By William Guggenheim. New York, American Defense Society.

This little book is published by the American Defense Society, of which Mr. Guggenheim is a Trustee. In it the author pleads for sane banking, sound money, business co-operation, and constitutional government. He objects to a paternalistic government, since he sees in that only another form of autocracy. The following paragraph gives an idea of Mr. Guggenheim's position; it evidences the sanity for which he pleads:

> It is well to bear in mind in our present political excitement that the honeyed words of politicians, and the unrealizable promises of reformers, must be considered with caution; for notwithstanding these assurances the demand for reasonable rates by our railroads must eventually be recognized; and our trade conditions are so adjusted to a protective tariff that only a moderate reduction in tariff rates would be advisable. Furthermore, our banks, which are the wells of credit, should be given much needed legislative aid, rather than made the plaything of Congressional or other investigating committees. At the present moment there is an unmistakable drift towards Government regulation and supervision of the larger affairs of life; we should readily accept such regulation and supervision, but at the same time we should insist that it shall stop there, so as to maintain for us a reasonable right to manage our own affairs; for though Government ownership is essential in some instances, I fear that its undue extension would prove harmful; human nature is difficult to contend against, and we should find that anything which tends to lessen the importance of the individual and destroy initiative would surely act as a barrier to progress.

Mr. Guggenheim's book contains much that is suggestive and sound; he is liberal, but he has his feet on the ground. He is saved from doctrinairism by his financial experience and knowledge, and it is this, as well as his deeply felt patriotism, that makes this book valuable.

Joseph Hergesheimer's Great Novel

The scene is laid in Salem when that city was still a port rich with the traffic of the Indies. It is a story of choleric shipmasters, charming girls and an aristocratic Manchu woman in carmine and jades and crusted gold.

It is generally agreed that Mr. Hergesheimer is our most important novelist; "Java Head" is easily his finest work.

pherson's Ossian poems, which were the rage of the eighteenth century.

In the young Scotch-Irishman, born in 1754, in Virginia, there was instilled early a deep sense of patriotism. As a boy he had already joined in an expedition against marauding Indians. With the outbreak of the Revolution he joined the force recruited by General Morgan, with whom he met Washington at Cambridge. Then he accompanied Morgan on his joint expedition with Arnold against Quebec. Here is a description from the novel of the battle of Quebec:

> After two months of toil and privation such as I wonder now we were able to endure, we reached Quebec with but seven hundred of the thousand men with whom we had started from Boston. In response to Arnold's daring summons to fight or surrender, the garrison shut the city's gates in our faces, and we were compelled to lie in our trenches and wait for General Montgomery's reinforcements. On the last day of December, 1775, in the midst of a blinding snowstorm, we attacked Quebec. General Montgomery soon received a bullet that ended his career, and Colonel Arnold was wounded shortly after. But for these two untoward misfortunes I truly believe we had won the day, and over all Canada and all British America would now be waving the Stars and Stripes. Be that as it may, we riflemen came very near taking Quebec alone and unsupported, for Morgan took the battery opposed to him, and penetrated to the very heart of the town. Meanwhile, General Montgomery's troops, broken and disorganized for lack of a leader, and Arnold's, in like case, were falling back. * * *".

The last part of the book tells of the hero's part in Clark's famous expedition to the Northwest. Throughout there is a slight but sufficiently sustained love story. This is a novel that may be especially recommended to young readers, who will derive from it a clear and vivid picture of the activities of two of the greatest men of our Revolutionary period.

THE FLAPPER'S MOTHER

THE FLAPPER'S MOTHER. By Madge Mears. New York: John Lane & Co. $1.40.

THE author has handled a delicate theme with discretion in this novel; it is rather a tour de force in skating on thin ice. The scene is a "nice" English suburb, the characters are Billy, the vicar's son; Vera, the flapper; her mother, whose husband has deserted her and who is now forced to take boarders; Alan Macarthy, an attractive Irishman, who is in love with Vera's mother, and Ritchie, a wealthy man married to a feeble-minded invalid, who becomes Vera's lover. By far the most attractive character in the book is Billy, the vicar's son. He is weak, physically, and abnormally sensitive to other people's suffering and to the suffering of any living thing. One of the most charming and humorous scenes in the book is when Billy, on an excursion with Vera, runs over a chicken on his motor bike. He is horrified at the accident, and allows himself to be mercilessly bullied and cheated by the old farmer woman who owns the bird.

Billy is very fond of Vera, but she looks down upon him with contempt on account of his physical weakness and his general lack of savoir vivre. His preoccupation with animals is to her only another indication of his effeminacy and general uselessness. His father, too, is greatly disappointed in Billy; indeed the vicar impresses the reader as being rather a hopeless old snob. Vera is attracted by Ritchie and Ritchie's Rolls-Royce; Ritchie's invalid wife is one of her mother's boarders. The thread of anomaly is double: the Irishman Macarthy wants to take Vera's mother away with him, though marriage with her is impossible because it is not known whether the husband who has deserted her is still alive or not. In a sense the book is an indictment of the law of divorce, though there is happily no ranting about it as there is in the plays of the younger Dumas. The reader is shown the spectacle of four people kept from their happiness through unavoidable first mistakes in the choice of their mates. Miss Mears has told her story delicately and without a suggestion of propaganda; she has been content, with happy results, to let her story tell itself and to allow the reader to draw his own inferences.

BLUE ALOES

BLUE ALOES: Stories of South Africa. By Cynthia Stockley. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

CYNTHIA STOCKLEY'S stories of South Africa are well known in this country. Readers remember "Poppy" and "The Claw," and recall the writer's mastery of strangeness, of eerie description, and with it her power of weaving an absorbing tale. Her latest book is a volume of four stories, in every one of which her talent is manifest—a book, indeed, not easy to lay down.

The first is a strange and thrilling story—a story that at the beginning suggests "The Turn of the Screw" as the story of a lovely haunted child, and later turns out to be a very different kind of a tale indeed. To Christine Chaine, an English governess lately arrived to take care of three little children at a Karoo farm comes a strange tapping on the window, a repellent odor in the darkness, a mysterious whisper out of the night. "Take care of the children," comes the whisper, "Take care of the boy." And Christine soon begins to feel that there is some strange menace hanging over the lovable but nervous little lad who is her chief care. What the danger is the story of course shows—and a terrible and unsuspected danger it is. Meanwhile, Christine's own love story is being worked out through surprise and mistake to happiness at last. The story is ingenious, well told, cruel in some of its details, but serene in its happy ending for Christine and the children and the man who befriends them all. And "atmosphere" as well as incident is well handled.

"Rosanne Ozanne" is a story of a very different type, a tale of witchcraft and two strange "gifts" that made life terrible for a beautiful girl. The supernatural element that one first suspects in "Blue Aloes," where nothing supernatural happens at all, is the base of the plot here. But the story of Rosanne's very womanly victory over her "gifts" is human enough

"The Leopard" and "April Folly" are of yet another genre—stories that picture gayeties in the English life in South Africa and that introduce us to English folk "out" from home. But these tales differ greatly from each other, too—one being the story of what happened to a man who "forgot" when he nearly fell into the clutches of the wrong kind of woman, and the other being the narrative of a girlish whim of interchanged "identities." All four stories are intensely interesting, and there should be a hearty welcome waiting for Cynthia Stockley's newest tales from South Africa.

PATRICIA BRENT

PATRICIA BRENT, SPINSTER. By the author of ? New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

THIS anonymous novel is said to have created something of a sensation in England, partly because it has much tickling humor, and also on account of the mystery of its authorship. That it was written by one thoroughly familiar with certain sordid phases of London everyday life is obvious. The picture it presents of the shabby genteel "residential hotel" in the Bayswater district, with its shiny-elbowed clerks, its pinched women of limited wardrobe but unimpeachable "family," its poor little efforts to ape the insolent insouciance of Park Lane and Portman Square, its week-long "serviettes," with their "ineradicable aroma of Monday's kipper," and its general atmosphere of semi-starved gentility, is pitilessly photographic. Only in London could be found such an establishment, and only there could be met such a collection of queer, frosty types as gathered about the dinner table every evening, where over the roast beef and brussels sprouts, or what not, they exchanged vapid opinions on the war, or, with more gusto, personal remarks tinged with acrid jealousy. In fact, jealousy was the keynote of the place. It was that which impelled Patricia Brent—a high-spirited girl employed as private secretary by a Mr. Arthur Bonsor, M. P.—to do the unbelievable things which make up the plot. We find her one day telling the spiteful "tabbies" of Galvin House that she is going to dine that evening with her fiancé. She has no such possession as a sweetheart, but she has been stung into saying she has because it has been intimated by them that she could not get one. So she dresses rather more carefully than usual and takes a taxi to the Quadrant, a fashionable restaurant, intending to dine by herself, but letting it be supposed that she has met her mythical betrothed.

Patricia finds that she has been followed by three spying women from Galvin House. In her desperation she walks to a table where a young man in the uniform of an officer sits alone, and takes a great chance. She tells the officer hurriedly that, for certain reasons, he must let her dine with him and pretend that he is her fiancé. It chances that the young man is a good sport and a gentleman, Lord Peter

What the Press Says About

The Desert of Wheat

A New Novel

By Zane Grey

"If Zane Grey has the secret of writing a rattling good story, that is no reason to hurl him from the ranks of literature. He has always had a keen, appreciative sense of literary standards, and, besides, has lived up to them sincerely in every one of the many volumes of Western stories he has written. Dumas did not compose more steadily nor more elaborately; and it implies no sin of exaggeration to compare this latest plot of his with the amazing texture of swift fiction which the old pere wove."
—New York Sun.

"There is a bigness to the novels of Zane Grey that makes them impressive. He is prophet as well as poet of the West. He sees the West in all its largeness, its grandeur; he interprets its massive mountains, its deep canyons, its free life and its free thought as no other novelist now writing has done."—Philadelphia Press.

ARNOLD BENNETT, ESSAYIST

Mr. ARNOLD BENNETT is one of those prolific writers who, if the mere bulk of his work is considered, produces quite as many books outside as inside his special literary field. His versatility is probably a result of his early training in journalism, but at any rate he seems to have fallen into the habit of turning from fiction to drama and then to autobiography, war, travel, and finally to essay writing with a cheerful impartiality that is a little bewildering to his host of readers, but undoubtedly restful enough to himself. He is one of those men who have the courage to lay out for themselves a daily stint of literary work, measured by a certain definite number of words, and to get through with it—which is more than many would-be industrious writers succeed in doing. TROLLOPE had a similar system, and, by keeping to it practically all his life, was able to turn out the amazing number of novels that forms his contribution to literature. Of course, such an ironclad system as TROLLOPE's has its faults, and very serious faults at that. A novelist cannot always be in his best creative mood merely at the tick of a clock, and many dreary, prosy passages scattered through TROLLOPE's novels bear witness to the flagging energies from which his overwhipped muse must frequently have suffered. Mr. BENNETT's system of varying the kind of literature to which he devotes himself lessens this danger, for we take it that he saves his best mood for his fiction writing, while literary essays and articles of travel and on the war occupy him on those days when invention fails. That makes an excellent working menu of savory entrées varied with plain but wholesome "potboilers."

In connection with Mr. BENNETT's essays the term "potboiler" is not used with the somewhat disdainful implication by which it is generally accompanied. It is merely in relation to his novels that the essays appear to belong to a possibly lower literary, imaginative level. But as essays they are stimulating, interpretative of much that is vital in current thought and history, and decidedly worth reading. This is all true of Mr. BENNETT's latest book of the kind, "Self and Self-Management," that the Doran Company has just published, and that, the author further explains on the title page, consists of "Essays About Existing." Pretty much anything might come under this head, and hence one finds in the six papers brought together in the little volume Mr. BENNETT's opinions on such disconnected matters as the war, war-work, frocks, social butterflies, the diary habit, fussers, and other Elian themes. But Mr. BENNETT treats his subjects in a much more practical, businesslike way than was the custom with the gentle Elia. The latter wrote for the pure joy of writing, for the satisfaction of bringing together quaint, familiar things, out of life or out of books, and endowing them with something of an artistic atmosphere. Mr. BENNETT, on the contrary, writes because he has something that he wants to teach, to drive home into the minds of his readers. This merely as these essays are compared with those of CHARLES LAMB. It is not to be inferred for a minute that Mr. BENNETT, as an essayist, is possessed with the dogmatism, the intolerant seriousness we are apt to attribute to the professional teacher. His prevailing mood, indeed, is half humorous, and his advice is given with a genial air that makes it altogether acceptable. His "axioms about war work," for instance, are cleverly put—

> The preliminary trouble and weariness and annoyance incidental to getting the work are themselves a necessary and inevitable part of war-work, just as much as bandaging the brows of heroes.
> There is not enough suitable work to go around, nor the thousandth part of what would be enough. Unsuitableness is a characteristic of nearly all war-work.
> The most valorous and morally valuable war-work is the work of working with impossible people.
> The reward of war-work will be the treaty of peace.

No one will object to Mr. BENNETT's edifying definition of happiness—that it is "chiefly the idea of 'satisfaction after full, honest effort'"—except that it is just a bit too edifying. A "light" essayist drops into the preacher's vein at his peril. That was probably the trouble with [illegible]

> I ought to tell you about all those little books of yours about life and improving oneself and being efficient and not wasting time, and so on, and so on. They're very nice to read, but they've never done me any good—practically.

Now the sad part of it is that these essays are essentially practical. It is this quality that distinguishes them from all other literary essays. So we feel quite sure that the dissatisfied young lady was not an average young lady—and that even she would have been improved by reading what Mr. BENNETT has to say on the meaning of frocks, or on social butterflies, or on the writing of diaries. Mr. BENNETT has kept a diary for over twenty-one years and he argues eloquently for the strange habit. It would be curious if his multitude of readers should obediently start in to keep diaries also. But we hope, in the interest of paper economy, and out of regard for future generations of readers, that they won't.

CHINA AND THE WAR

CHINA AND THE WORLD WAR. By W. Reginald Wheeler of the Faculty of Hangchow College, Hangchow, China. Illustrated. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.75.

Easily agreeing with the opening assertion in this book that, because with the war over, the greatest potential market of the world lies in China and the Far East, worldwide attention is likely to be focused there, the value of Mr. Wheeler's comprehensive work is at once apparent. It is interesting to accompany the author from the establishment of the Chinese Republic—just about the time Germany let loose the hideous struggle in Europe, through the period when she severed relations with the Teutonic Empire and declared war to the Chinese-Japanese military agreement, and so to the present time, when China has her place at the peace table in Paris. To the student of Chinese progress, as well as to the person who gives but casual attention to the development of that great republic, this volume will be indispensable.

Speaking with the authority of one who has been on the ground for years, and who is familiar with the complexities of Chinese international relations, especially those with Japan, Mr. Wheeler is sure of his position when he advances a theory or a statement, so that what he writes has all the dignity of an acknowledged historian. Speaking of the future of China, the writer says that, as America and the allied nations have pledged themselves to stand by Russia, they will certainly do no less for China. He refers to Japan as being at the crossroads of its history—on the one hand, facing an imperialistic course that cannot but mean danger and aggression upon its neighbors, and on the other, halting before the decision to align itself with the international tendencies of the age in a fair and friendly national policy toward all the world. "These aspirations and tendencies in Asia must be considered in the Peace Conference," says the author, adding, with unmistakable apprehension, that "unless this is done the consequences from the standpoint of a maintenance of the world peace will be disastrous." In common with several other thoughtful books published of late which were written before the war, the author of this one has shown a marked prophetic vision. One has only to read the daily newspapers to realize this truth.

Bowen, a Lieutenant Colonel in the army. He "plays the game," and the eavesdropping Miss Wangle and her companions from the residential hotel are confounded. Naturally, Lord Peter falls in love with Patricia, and the remainder of the book is taken up with the conflict between her regard for the dashing young officer and the feeling that she cannot allow anything serious to follow the "pick-up" acquaintance. But Peter brings his sister, Lady Tanagra, into the affair, and finally matters are satisfactorily adjusted.

The story itself is nothing remarkable [illegible]. The character drawing and environment are everything. Lord Peter is a real person, familiar to thousands of Americans, especially to those who have spent part of the last four years in France, and is delightful throughout. Patricia is inclined to be hard, and there is little sympathy with her, but she is an English type easily recognized. It is the easy way in which it is written, together with the unstrained humor, that brings us so intimately into that awful boarding house, which may make this book as popular on this side of the Atlantic as it is reported to be on the other. One thing is undeniable—it is jolly good fun throughout.

NUMBER SEVENTEEN

NUMBER SEVENTEEN. By Louis Tracy. New York: Edward J. Clode. $1.50.

Supposing you were a popular author of stories and special articles. Suppose further that you went to the theatre one evening and were tremendously attracted by a lovely girl sitting in her box with a handsome gentleman, evidently her father. Then, as you walked out after the play, you heard the father say to the daughter: "You take a cab home, my dear. I have to go to the Constitutional Club for a few moments." Then, the girl still in your mind, you went to your own flat, No. 16 Innesmore Mansions. In No. 17, you happen to know, lives a quiet, irreproachable lady, Mrs. Lester. And then, while you stepped out into the hall, suppose you saw the father of the lovely girl who had attracted you at the theatre, going into Mrs. Tracy's apartment. Then, suppose that your servant, Bates, saw the visitor leave and mail a letter. It might strike you as incongruous and, if you were cynical, give you food for unwholesome reflection. But what would you do, if, the next morning, the papers announced that Mrs. Tracy had been murdered during the night? And if, as is the case with the hero of this novel, you had been given a letter of introduction by a friend to an authority on aeronautics, about which you were writing a special article, and found, when you came to dinner, that your host was the very gentleman whom you had seen enter the murdered woman's apartment the night before and that the lovely girl was his daughter, you would probably be very seriously disturbed.

This is the initial situation in a rattling good mystery story. Mr. Tracy has a very agreeable, light narrative manner which enlivens the sombreness of his tale. He remarks, for instance, that his hero, Theydon, a novelist, glanced at the book reviews in the paper to gain consolation, at second hand, by reading of the awful drivel other people were writing. In the detective, Furneaux, he has done an admirable bit of grotesque characterization. The plot has to do with the machinations of a band of Chinese Manchus, intent on extirpating the people who have financed the democratic movement in China. It would be unfair to give away the plot. It is enough to say that it is ingeniously contrived and sustained to the end.

THE LAW OF MORTGAGES

INDIVIDUAL AND CORPORATION MORTGAGES. By William Lilly. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co.

This little book well fills its design, which is to provide instruction for those interested in mortgages as investors or men of business. That requires something grading between the voluminous and technical treatises of the lawyers, and yet precise enough to meet the needs of those who are making monetary engagements. The pledge of property lies at the threshold of many contracts, and the great body of financial business is based upon it. Bankers and their clerks, brokers and their customers, are among those who will find the book useful.

Mental Suggestion

A book by the Rev. Dr. Loring W. Batten entitled "The Relief of Pain by Mental Suggestion" is described as a study of the operations of moral and religious forces in healing. The book is based on the author's experiences in the practice of the principles and methods of the so-called Emmanuel Movement that was founded by the Rev. Dr. Worcester. (Moffat, Yard & Co. $1.25.)

The Garden of Survival
By Algernon Blackwood, Author of "Julius Le Vallon," etc.

Mrs. MARGARET DELAND writes of this wonderful little book:—
"As I read it, I kept thinking of moonlit nights in still gardens—all perfume and silence! . . . The loveliness of the Idea is almost too delicate for the words in which it is clothed. Yet its piercing truthfulness strikes to the very heart of the Great Fear,—and may kill it, at any rate for some of us; kill it and leave Life—poor, grieving frightened Life!—safe in the untroubled Garden of Love. It is quite wonderful to me that a book so exquisite and fragile has such power. It is almost as if butterflies' wings lifted an eagle, or one made a rapier from a dew-hung spider's web."

MR. GALSWORTHY ON WAR AND OTHER THINGS

ANOTHER SHEAF. By John Galsworthy. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

MR. GALSWORTHY writes exquisitely. And he thinks keenly on pressing practical problems. Everybody knows these two things; but when such a book is published as "A Sheaf" a few years ago, and now "Another Sheaf," it is well to recall them before we take up the volume. For a writer who thinks keenly, feels humanely, and writes beautifully is indeed a master to turn to in this day—and it goes without saying that what he writes is valuable. We open "Another Sheaf" in the full confidence of that. And our confidence is not misplaced.

For the most part, Mr. Galsworthy's new group of papers—they are too pertinent considerations of practical things to be called precisely essays—are devoted to questions of reconstruction. Written during the war, they discuss after-the-war problems. There are significant reflections upon Anglo-American relations and upon certain American characteristics, with the possibilities of changes in the future in America. There is a very serious paper upon the soldier-workman after the war. There is an exquisitely beautiful call to the rehabilitation of stricken men. And there is some very Galsworthian satire. There are two important papers, too, upon the English land situation in 1917 and then in 1918. This is not the entire contents of the book, but it shows the general tone and significance of "Another Sheaf."

We are first interested here, perhaps, in what Mr. Galsworthy has to say of the friendship between England and America. The paper is worth quoting at length—at far greater length than a brief review permits; it is to be hoped that it will be very widely read in this country, so sane is it, so truly stirring. It begins:

> On the mutual understanding of each other by Britons and Americans the future happiness of nations depends more than on any other world cause.

And the author, who knows America and Americans, goes on:

> There is something touching and terrifying about our character, about the depth at which it keeps its real yearnings, about the perversity with which it disguises them, and its inability to show its feelings. We are, deep down, under all our lazy mentality, the most combative and competitive race in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of the American. This is at once a spiritual link with America, and yet one of the great barriers to friendship between the two peoples. * * * Exactly what proportion of American blood at this time of day is British, I know not; but enough to make us definitely cousins—always an awkward relationship. We see in Americans a sort of image of ourselves; feel near enough, yet far enough, to criticise and carp at the points of difference. * * * Probably community of language, rather than of blood, accounts for our sense of kinship, for a common means of expression cannot but mould thought and feeling into some kind of unity. One can hardly overrate the intimacy which a common literature brings. * * *
> The American and Briton, especially bone-deep defiance of fate, a readiness for anything which may turn up, a dry, wry smile under the blackest sky, and an individual way of looking at things which nothing can shake. Americans and Britons both, we must and will think for ourselves, and know why we do a thing before we do it. We have ingrained respect for the individual conscience which is at the bottom of all free institutions.

And now, Mr. Galsworthy continues:

> If throughout western civilization we can secure the single democratic principle of government, its single level of State morality in thought and action, we shall be well on our way to unanimity throughout the world. * * * It is my belief that only in a world thus uniform, and freed from any danger of pounce by autocracies, have States any chance to develop the "individual conscience to a point which shall make democracy proof against anarchy and themselves proof against dissolution; and only in such a world can a League of Nations to enforce peace succeed. * * *
> For this advance to a uniform civilization the solidarity of the English-speaking races is vital. Without that there will be no bottom on which to build. * * * We shall not fail—neither ourselves, nor each other. Our comradeship will endure.

There is more about America in the latter part of the essay on "Anglo-American Drama and Its Future." Americans, Mr. Galsworthy thinks, have only just begun to believe in themselves as artists—but this belief, he is convinced, is destined to grow quickly now. America will brood more over things, strike deeper to the roots of thought and action, interpret more of underlying truth. He adds:

> And to this art about to come (art inevitably moves slowly) into its own—to American drama, poetry, fiction, music, painting, sculpture—sincerity, an unswerving fidelity to self, alone will bring the dignity worthy of a great and free people.

The plea for "the sacred work" of rehabilitation, in spirit, body, activity, for maimed and stricken men is unforgettable in its beauty, its call to justice, its scorning of sentimentalities. Here, too, is something that every one should read—once having read it, he need not be told to remember! It is something so fine, so sound, that it should reach into the heart and experience, surely, of every one of us. "The Balance-Sheet of the Soldier Workman" is, indeed, a challenge to serious thought just now. "Speculations"—in which again Mr. Galsworthy has much that is stimulating to say of America—is another beautiful and stirring call to better ways of thinking and living. Says the author here:

> All English-speaking peoples will go to the adventure of peace with something of big purpose and spirit in their hearts, with something of free outlook. * * * To do our jobs really well and to be brotherly! To seek health, and ensure beauty! If, in Britain and America, in all the English-speaking nations, we can put that simple faith into real and thorough practice, what may not this century yet bring forth?

"Another Sheaf" is, indeed, a vital challenge to us all to the meeting of the "adventure of peace."

"evangelist" taking up the task of instructing the American people as to the true meaning and character of the war. In that chapter it is set forth that after the sinking of the Lusitania Mr. Wilson, knowing the temperament of his people, believed that "if he could make them see that the whole character of the war had changed, that he himself saw it in a new light, that it was no longer a war as the world hitherto had always thought about war * * * but it was a war of principle, a war that threatened freedom and imperiled liberty and democracy that was the foundation of American institutions," then "the American people would no more hesitate," but would be as resolute for war as they had been to fight against royal tyranny; "before they would draw the sword, in them must be the spirit of the crusader," and that spirit he sought to inculcate. The "whole character" of the war had not changed. It was as monstrous and wicked in the hour of its beginning as at any other time; it was only the methods of carrying it on that changed by the broadening application of "frightfulness." But all conceivable barbarities were implied in the satanic principles and purposes for which it was begun, and these from the very beginning were understood by men of clear vision.

It is a mistake to say that Mr. Wilson undertook the task of showing the American people that the war had changed its character; that it was a war which en- must prepare themselves to take part in it. That would have been grossly incompatible with his official duty to maintain that strict neutrality he proclaimed. It was impossible that Mr. Wilson should be the leader in this "campaign of education." There were other leaders, many of the first men of the land, in the work he was precluded from undertaking. From innumerable platforms, from the pulpit, through books and pamphlets and the public press the truth about Germany's purposes and Germany's wickedness and inhumanity was told with ceaseless reiteration until no American whom prejudice or alien sympathy had not made deaf could have failed to understand what the war was about and what danger for America it involved.

Mr. Lowe is much nearer the truth when he speaks of the "evolution" of Mr. Wilson. He was pressed forward as the mass of the people was pressed forward by the compelling power of circumstance as Germany proceeded on her wicked courses. The time came when all the people saw that the men of America must take their places in the ranks of those who were defending the liberties of the world. It is out of place to say that "Mr. Wilson had not preached in vain" in bringing the people to this state of mind. To the head of a neutral State such preaching was necessarily forbidden. By other tongues and other pens the instruction had been given, the truth revealed, and the spirit of the people prepared. But Mr. Lowe is on solid ground when he describes Mr. Wilson as a great moral leader who has the world for his audience; it is true, too, that when the war was inevitable, when war came, he made it to the American people "a moral cause." That is the secret of Mr. Wilson's present pre-eminence in the council of the nations at Paris.

LITERARY BOSTON DURING THE LAST CENTURY

MEMORIES GRAVE AND GAY. By Florence Howe Hall. New York: Harper & Brothers. $3.50.

THE LETTERS OF SUSAN HALE. Edited by Caroline P. Atkinson. With an introduction by Edward Everett Hale. Boston: The Marshall Jones Company. $3.50.

IN these two volumes, one by the sister of Edward Everett Hale, the other by the daughter of Julia Ward Howe and Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, we get a full view of the life of Boston during the greater part of the nineteenth century. Susan Hale was born in Boston in 1833 and died in 1910 at her Summer place, Matunuck, in Rhode Island. Mrs. Hall was born in 1845 and belongs to a younger generation than Susan Hale, but their records are none the less contemporary records. Mrs. Hall's memories take us down into the heart of the suffrage movement in which she has taken a prominent part; nevertheless it is the Boston of the last half of the nineteenth century that gives the chief flavor of her volume. It is the Boston of Longfellow and Holmes and Charles Sumner, of Edwin Booth and Charlotte Cushman and golden days at the Howard Atheneum, of Emerson and abolitionist debates that holds the attention in both these delightful books.

One is struck by the constant intercourse with England and the Continent generally, with revolutionary movements in Crete and in Greece, which engaged the strict attention of these Bostonians. Nothing could be further from provincialism than the life of the New England capital in that time. Susan Hale spent a great deal of her life in foreign travel; she visited Egypt, where one of her brothers was Vice Consul, she studied art in Paris, she was well acquainted with the Continent. At the Howes' the children met Florence Nightingale and Thackeray, Louis Kossuth and Arthur Hugh Clough. Samuel Gridley Howe had aided the Greeks in their struggle for independence against the Turk. The King of Greece had made him a Knight of St. George, a title which he never himself used. The children, as if they had been English children, grew up "under the shadow of Byron's helmet":

> While the Institution for the Blind was our pleasant refuge, our permanent and dearly loved home was "Green Peace."
> As you came in the main door of entrance and looked down the long hallway of the house you saw directly opposite to you Byron's helmet, fitting symbol of the man who dwelt there. My father had hung it up, as a returned pilgrim did his staff and cockle-hat in the olden time, or a warrior his sword and shield.
> True, father had never worn that or any other helmet; unless I am much mistaken, neither had Byron. Yet the noble example and stirring verses of the poet had much to do with young Howe's sailing for Greece, where for seven long years he helped carry out the work which Byron had begun. When, broken in health, he at length left ancient Hellas, she was once more free! Thus the helmet reminded those who knew, not only of the poet's devotion to the cause for which he died, but also of the work of his admirer and successor, Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, the "Chevalier," as he was called by his intimates.

It is a curious reflection that these New Englanders of Boston, popularly supposed the acme of insularity, grew up under so intimate relationship with the greatest revolutionary of the early nineteenth century. To bring Byron into touch with the Back Bay is something of a feat; Dr. Howe accomplished it because of his noble ardor in the cause for which Byron gave up his life.

Susan Hale's letters reveal a different personality entirely; mercurial, whimsical, her letters read like the vivacious, entirely unstudied correspondence of a very jolly girl who is having the best sort of time out of Europe, from Egypt, from Mexico, from California and from Washington, from Rhode Island and Chicago. The really humorous pen-and-ink illustrations with which Miss Hale enlivened them add greatly to the interest of the volume. Here is part of a letter written in 1890 from Washington describing a dinner at the Vice President's house:

> In great fear and trembling I climbed into my long-tailed gown, the white trimmed with Algiers stripes. Do tell Miss Bolger it fits like a glove, and amazed everybody with its suitableness—and good effect. Though the Senators' wives sat behind great diamond crescents in red velvet gowns. * * * Ruth had a very pretty white satin and sort of yellowish brocade dinner-gown. Judge Field of California was to take me out, and he proved very gallant, talkative, and agreeable, rather ponderous and would-be judicial in manner. But Mr. Senator Hoar was on the other side, of course, friendly and most jolly, and our end was altogether the lively one, for most of these great men prefer, I believe, to slumber on the lea like the pimpernel, as they dine, and their wives, in general, are not the sort to rouse them.

> Dear Luc—I'm really feeling so very English that I 'ope you'll be able to see the truly English eccent through me writing even; for you know there are several English in the 'ouse 'ere, and among others a lady all hung about with silver beads, which everybody is wearing at present, and rings on all her fingers—indeed, I dessay, bells upon her toes, you know. I was eating strawberries and sugar, with orange squeezed on them, and as I was in the very act of squeezing the orange, she said, looking me full in the face—
> "That must be very nasty!"
> "On the contrary," said I, "I assure you that if it were nasty, I should not do it; it is very nice."

On the whole it may be said of these two books that the one discloses an epoch while the other reveals a personality. In Susan Hale's letters there is as little of primness as possible, which may be a surprise to some who entertain preconceived notions of school-marms and Bostonians. There is a pleasant bond between these two volumes in the fact that Mrs. Hall's sister and brother attended Susan Hale's school in Boston:

> Brother Harry and sister Laura went at this time to a school kept by Miss Susan Hale, a sister of Edward Everett Hale. Harry had been from his tenderest years an extremely mischievous child. If Miss Hale punished him by putting him in the closet, some damage to the clothing hanging there was sure to result. Laura was a very good and amiable little girl, and conscientious as well.

There is little of "closet-putting" in Miss Hale's correspondence; hers must have been a singularly amiable and sympathetic personality, as is proved by the large number of young people who came to see her at Matunuck, her Summer home in Rhode Island. The chief quality in both these volumes is agreeableness; they are the products of a comfortable and cultivated society. Yet there is no hint of smugness or complacency. Boston was as alive to injustice in foreign lands as it was sensitive to the injustive of slavery in our own. Mrs. Hall describes the meeting, presided over by her father, held to support the rising of the Cretans against the barbarous Greeks in 1866-68. Her father now spoke in defense of the people whom he had gone to Greece to befriend in his youth. At this meeting Edward Everett Hale was also one of the speakers. Yet, despite their similarity in origin, there is very little similarity in the temper or the subject-matter of these two books. The reader who takes up only one will lose a great deal in the other.

FOR GOD AND COUNTRY

FOR GOD AND COUNTRY. By Randolph H. McKim. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

Dr. McKim, who is rector of the Church of the Epiphany at Washington, D. C., was one of the first ministers in the country to protest against the sinking of the Lusitania and the invasion of Belgium, and to protest that, as a Christian country, we were justified in going to war with Germany. He says in his preface that, after delivering one of these sermons, he received a letter from one high up in the councils of the State Department remonstrating with him for his militant attitude. Germany, this gentleman said, had a right to sink the Lusitania because it was an "enemy ship," and he declared that our diplomacy had scored a signal success, and that Germany had abandoned submarine warfare.

In the first sermon in this book, delivered in May, 1917, Dr. McKim, taking as his text the passage from John, "Jesus answered. * * * 'If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight,'" interprets it as meaning that, since Jesus' kingdom was in the spiritual and not in the civil world, in His kingdom, of course, warfare was ineffectual. But Jesus mundane sphere warfare was sometimes necessary, even noble. Also, he instances the large amount of imagery involving armor and things of war in the New Testament as indicating that the apostles and their Master recognized warfare as a necessary institution.

Here is a passage from another sermon of Dr. McKim's indicating his attitude about the war. The sermon was delivered as early as November, 1915:

> We allowed the neutrality of Belgium to be violated without a word of protest. We saw the country of the Belgians ruined and devastated, its ancient, hospitable soil sown with thousands of tombs; its cities burned; its peaceful citizens shot to death by hundreds and thousands, and still we raised no voice of protest. * * * I ask did we do our duty to ourselves and to mankind when the Lusitania was barbarously attacked on the high seas and a thousand human beings—men, women, and little children—sent to their deaths?

Dr. McKim advocated the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, which, in fact, was done, but not till over a year after the delivery of his sermon on the subject.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

YASHKA: My Life as Peasant, Officer, and Exile. By Maria Botchkareva, Commander of the Russian Women's Battalion of Death. As set down by Isaac Don Levine. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.

WITHOUT reflecting in any manner on the veracity of "The Russian Joan of Arc" or the fidelity of her painstaking chronicler and amanuensis, it may at once be said that the offspring of their joint labors will put a severe strain on the credulity of the critical reader. The warning is probably superfluous, for are we not all prepared for an appearance of incredulity in everything that comes out of Russia, and especially in any attempt to record or interpret recent events in that strange and most chaotic land? But there is a further difficulty in the case of this intrepid heroine, for though her authorized interpreter dwells with the utmost earnestness on her "reluctance to take every adventurous stranger into her confidence," it must be acknowledged that a contrary belief has got abroad in the world. Perhaps her manifest complacency toward adventurous photographers has created a false notion of her opinion of publicity, or perhaps strangers have taken an unfair advantage of her avowed illiteracy; be that as it will, we now learn that, in spite of all that has been attributed to her, her authentic story has never before been told, and that every attempt "to interpret this arresting personality" has hitherto been "a riot of misinformation and misunderstanding."

No reader who has tried, out of the welter of contradictory stories, to form a clear idea of the heroic leader of the Battalion of Death can have any doubt on this point or fail to be grateful to Mr. Don Levine for the enormous pains he has taken to get the truth from Botchkareva herself and "to set down her narrative verbatim." If he continue a little perplexed, it will be because a similar, though briefer, narrative has been given out before, for on many essential points it differs utterly from this. Since it, too, was autobiographic in form, it would have been wise of the present editor to secure from his heroine a categorical repudiation of all former lives and to have this one established once and for all as the only authentic realization of "her cherished dream to have a complete record of her life incorporated in a book."

The point is insisted upon because of some troublesome discrepancies. To make a list even of the major ones would be tedious, but as an instance, trivial perhaps in itself, take the story of Yashka's first encounter with the Germans. According to an earlier version this was in December, 1915, but now we learn that she was a veteran by that time. She is still a little hazy about dates; however we are definitely informed that she was carried to Kiev, wounded, "about Easter, 1915." Now Easter fell that year early in April, so it must have been a good while before that she first went into action. There is a lively account of the affair which began with the Germans "releasing a gas wave." Then "over the wire," we read, "came the order to put on our masks." This is interesting, for the first news that the world ever had of gas on the western front came from Ypres in the latter part of April. It is, of course, easily conceivable that the new weapon had already been tried out in the East, but the wonder is that the Russians accepted it as a thing to be expected and that at so early a date troops supposed commonly to be ill-equipped were already furnished with gas masks.

It has been said that this is a quite trivial point, but it is one of those points that skeptical readers are very apt to fasten upon. It is therefore to be regretted that in general the author is so very vague about dates and yet so extremely explicit in other details. Many of these details are quite new. In some of the earlier stories she went to war with her husband and served in the same company; then we learned that she really went "to avenge her husband's death," but now her husband has little or nothing to do with her adventures. Formerly her husband was a big, good-natured fellow—"always kind" and "always laughing"; now he is an incorrigible wife-beater. There are indeed two who might pass as husbands in the present story, but there is little to choose between them on this score. It appears, too, that the unforgettable interview with the Czar, that interview "blazoned on my memory," never happened—her transactions with the Czar were all in writing.

But it is quite unnecessary to dwell on the departures of the story "as set down by Isaac Don Levine" from the stories we have heard before, because the stories we have heard before are manifestly false. One of the many officers captured by this brave woman on the field of battle is said to have exclaimed with his last breath: "I would that Russia had a million like you." It may be so, yet for the general reader it is perhaps fortunate that there is only one. "Know Botchkareva," says Mr. Don Levine, "and you shall know Russia." The task is sufficiently difficult. What would it be if we had a million such to master? In sum, it is impossible to promise the general reader that he will know Russia after reading this lively book, but we can quite confidently assure him of a very thrilling tale.

THE DISABLED SOLDIER

THE DISABLED SOLDIER. By Douglas C. McMurtrie. With an introduction by Jeremiah Milbank. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.

IN this compact and comprehensive book the author, who is director of the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, discusses the historic and contemporary bearings of his subject. He tells in his first chapter of the contempt and indignity in which cripples have been held since the dawn of time. Those mentally disabled were somehow regarded by the ancients as allied with the Gods, but those physically unfit were considered to be in league with devils. The history of disabled soldiers, Mr. McMurtrie [illegible] hidden from us by a "film of blood." In most cases disabled soldiers were killed by the victorious enemy on the battlefield. For the greater part, his book is a discussion of what can be done nowadays to put the disabled soldier back on his feet:

> About the first move of a constructive character looking toward putting disabled men back on their feet must be credited to Belgium. In 1908 there was founded at Charleroi, in the Province of Hainaut, a school and shop for men crippled in industrial accidents. It was pointed out by a public-spirited lawyer, Paul Pastur, that it was better to train the disabled for work which they could perform than to be content with paying them to remain in idleness. The subjects taught to the adult pupils in this Belgian school were bookbinding, shoe repairing, tailoring, saddlery, harness making, and clerical work. There were likewise shops for the seriously disabled and older men for the making of grass carpets and baskets.

The admirable illustrations in the book show the tremendous strides that have been made in the direction indicated by the above quotation. We see pictures of men with both arms gone doing agricultural work in France, others with one and two arms missing working at machines, men learning to typewrite and doing draftsman's work even before they have left the hospitals, soldiers who have never learned to read and write doing so in schools connected with their hospitals during convalescence, Indian soldiers in London learning useful trades so that they will not go into the trade of begging, blind men working successfully at poultry raising. Besides telling of all these useful lines of endeavor and discussing the pension problems connected with the disabled soldiers the author puts forth an eloquent plea for co-operation on the part of the general public toward the crippled soldier, for a new and more hopeful attitude on the part of parents and, most powerfully, for able men to take charge of the induction of the disabled into industry:

> Final decision on all these points of consideration will depend in large degree on the calibre of the men who, as advisers, are put in touch with the disabled soldiers. Personal strength and force are at a premium. The strong man will make a success at this preliminary work—the average man will fail. If it should be asked what is the greatest need of the disabled soldier at this time the answer would be—not industrial school equipment, not elaborate courses, not splendid buildings—but the finest men the country affords to help him in the critical period immediately following disablement. When there is found exceptionally successful work with injured soldiers, there will be found a man of unusual qualifications. In Great Britain experience has shown the need for picking most carefully the executive secretary of local war pensions committees to deal with disabled soldiers and sailors, for upon the man chosen turns the success or failure of work in the district.

There is no phase of the problem which the author does not touch. It is a labor of love, and Mr. McMurtrie has done it forcibly and clearly. The proceeds of the sale of the book, which should be large, have been assigned to the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, of which the author is the director.

tain of the numerous exploits of "the Navy-That-Floats, the Navy-That-Flies, and the Navy-Under-the-Sea," which together make up "The Navy Eternal." It is of the achievements of this navy during the Great War that "Bartimeus" tells us; the heroic story of the Shark, which though completely overwhelmed by numbers, fought until the waves were "lapping over the water-logged hulk and sank at last with colors flying from the yard-arm; the scarcely less heroic, but happily ending story of the two destroyers, Swift and Broke, which in a fight with five German destroyers sank three and torpedoed one of the others. And then there is that magnificent exploit of the two enginemen belonging to the tiny Violet May, on a night which was one of tragedy for the Drifter Patrol. But it was tragedy swiftly and thoroughly avenged only a very few weeks later, when two British and three French destroyers badly mauled and finally drove off in ignominious flight no less than eighteen German torpedo craft! And thrilling as any sea fight of which history preserves the memory is the story of how the British destroyer, Mary Rose, rushed to the rescue of a convoy, fought single-handed against three of Germany's "newest and fastest light cruisers," and went down at last with her colors still fluttering defiance to the enemy. The book ends with the glorious story of the victory at Zeebrugge, and having evidently been finished before the signing of the armistice, says nothing of that day when the German Grand Fleet slunk like a whipped and frightened cur between the two lines of allied battleships, in abject and ignominious surrender.

Of the Air Service the author has a good deal to say, all of it interesting, and so too of the feats of the submarines. To an American, however, one of the most absorbing as well as most important chapters of the book is that one which tells of the long-delayed coming of the American fleet, and the never-to-be-forgotten day when they appeared—"As per schedule," so the American Admiral laconically telegraphed to Washington. Then, at last, were the two navies linked, "kinsmen joining kinsmen as an integral part of one fleet." Space does not suffice for comment on more than a very small section of the book, but something must be said about the seaplanes "who contemplate their stern mission"—bombing—"with an inextinguishable and fathomless sense of humor." This sense of humor is pleasantly fed by such trifling exploits as that of the youth who, single-handed, "fought a Zeppelin with a Webley-Scott pistol and imprecations." Fishing smacks and battle cruisers, motor launches and submarines and flyers of various kinds, all have their part in the record of steadfast heroism and gallantry and invincible courage, a record of which two nations may be proud for all time as testimony to the high, undying valor of "The Navy Eternal."

BELGIUM'S SECRET PRESS

THE SECRET PRESS IN BELGIUM. By Jean Massart. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

THE author, who is Vice Director of the Class of Sciences in the Royal Academy of Belgium, has told a story of journalistic heroism and humor that can still be read with profit and entertainment. Epecially the latter; with the departure of the Teutons and the entry of King Albert, both matters of history, the story of the struggling and clandestine efforts of Belgians to counteract German lies about their entry is relieved of tension and mellowed by humor. Before the signing of the armistice we should have read this little book with bated breaths and mounting indignation; now we read it with a genial appreciation of the men who kept a patriotic press going under the very noses of von Bissing and his amiable confederates and a contempt for the German martinets who attempted to suppress it.

How newspapers were transported in baskets of vegetables, so that they smelt of carrots and cheeses, how the editors of "La Libre Belgique," (the foremost of the secret papers printed by volunteer writers and distributed gratuitously,) had to apologize for the odor of the copies on account of the strange bedfellows with which the paper had to travel to escape the vigilance of the German authorities, how the City of Brussels was fined £200,000 because two of its policemen defended from a beating at the hands of a spy, are among the incidents recounted in the volume. Here is an example of the author's vivid narrative:

> Only those who have lived under torturing, detested tyranny can understand the eager curiosity with which the reader of "La Libre Belgique" awaits his newspaper.
> When will the next issue appear? No one knows, for the journal is "regularly irregular," as the subtitle announces.
> How will it reach us? We do not know this either. Sometimes it is dropped into the letter box, inclosed in an envelope; sometimes a friend drops it mysteriously into your hand; sometimes it is found in a prominent place in the desk or writing table, (it was thus that Baron von Bissing used to receive it.)
> Where is it printed? Mystery? If we are to believe the announcement at the head of the front page, its telegraph address is "Kommandantur—Brussels." As for the publishing and editorial offices, "as these cannot be a very reposeful spot, they are installed in an automobile cellar."
> Who are the contributors? The Jesuits, say some; the Freemasons, so others assert. One statement is as true as another, for there are no longer Clericals, nor Socialists, nor Liberals, nor Flamingants in Belgium; they are only Belgians, inspired by the same ardor and all doing their duty as patriots.

In all the quotations from this secret press there is something of the humor of a clever man laughing at a cretinous giant. It is this which makes the record entertaining as well as inspiring.

TWO FISHERS

TWO FISHERS AND OTHER POEMS. By Herbert E. Palmer. London: Elkin Mathews, Cork Street.

Mr. Palmer has the naïveté which is the poet's and the child's. At his best he sees things freshly, in their essence:

Nature has been to me lately
As a fair and radiant bride.
She has drawn me with strange gentleness
To the hollow of her side.

Or again in the poem "Nature in Wartime":

If flowers could speak
And leaves and plants knew words,
In what strange phrase of chiding would they seek
To tell their anger at this clash of swords!

Shrapnel crushes them in its fierce caress;
The black guns chant a paean of their skill.
But little recks the world in its distress
The sorrow that is silent on the hill.

Besides this naïveté, which delights us in the best poetry, Mr. Palmer possesses sense of rhythm; his best things have the lilt of Elizabethan song:

When the cruel war is over
The earth will sing like a lover;
And grasses, flowers, and trees
Will shake with joy in the breeze.
Very old weary men
Will know their youth again,
And be blithe as England's soldiers
They first sailed o'er the seas.

Mr. Palmer, judging by the content of some of his poems, was a student in Germany before the war, and he dwells often on the pain caused by the destruction of his illusions about the German people. The longest poem, "Two Fishers," is dedicated to a Captain in the English Army, a fellow-student at a German university, who enlisted with the outbreak of war.

BRADFORD RHODES

BRADFORD RHODES: A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH. By Elmer H. Youngman. Morado Park, Beaver Falls, Pa.

This sketch of a well-known banker and financial editor was written by Elmer H. Youngman, the editor of The Bankers' Magazine and for many years associated with Mr. Rhodes in the publishing business. The sketch was privately printed for presentation at the sixteenth annual reunion of the Rhodes families. Mr. Rhodes was born on a farm in Chippewa Township, Beaver County, Penn., Feb. 25, 1845. As a boy and youth Bradford Rhodes worked on a farm, but in 1863 he went to Pittsburgh. From 1867 to 1868 he taught in the Darlington Academy, but finally he drifted to New York. Here he worked as a reporter on a daily newspaper until, in December, 1873, he established The Safeguard, a publication devoted to savings bank interests. In 1877 The Safeguard became The Rhodes Journal of Banking. "The publication," we are told, "grew in popular favor and soon became the leading bankers' publication in the United States. As an editor and publisher of financial books and magazines Mr. Rhodes took a prominent part in shaping the country's banking and financial legislation, working always in behalf of sound principles." Besides his publishing interests Mr. Rhodes became President of three banks, the Thirty-fourth Street National, the Union Savings Bank of Westchester County, and the First National of Mamaroneck, N. Y. For three terms he was a Member of Assembly of the New York Legislature. Here he was instrumental in securing the passage of the Savings Bank Investment law and the Anti-Bucket Shop law, as well as other reform measures. He died in November, 1917.

"Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour"—?
SALT or, The Education of Griffith Adams
BY CAPT. CHARLES G. NORRIS
"Among the most gripping and instructive of recent works of fiction. It deals with one of the livest and commonest of problems, namely, the education of youth. It is a terrible indictment of parental delinquency, and of school, college and university failure to accomplish the very things for which they are supposed to exist. The book is not easy reading in some places, but it is brave and sincere. It simply had to be written by somebody. I commend it especially to parents who are in the great business of rearing a family; to ministers, whose work naturally carries them into educational processes; to teachers and college men generally, who have resting upon them heavy responsibilities and facing them extraordinary opportunities."

NEW YORK'S INITIAL MOTOR TRUCK SHOW THIS WEEK

Sixty Different Makes of Commercial Vehicles in Addition to Tractors and Trailers Will Be Exhibited in Madison Square Garden and Sixty-Ninth Regiment Armory

RECORD YEAR AHEAD IN TRUCK PRODUCTION

NEW YORK'S automobile show will be continued during the coming week, beginning tomorrow morning in Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory with the largest display of motor trucks, light delivery wagons, and other new material for more rapid and efficient transportation. The passenger car show week closed last night, and it was a wise thought that prompted the committee of the New York Dealers' Association to add a commercial car week to properly round out the largest automobile show of the year.

A separate and thoroughly comprehensive commercial motor car exhibit has never before been held here. It comes in good time, for the motor truck has played so large a part in the success of the war, and in saving home transportation from perilous congestion, that it has assumed a far more important place in the public eye than ever before. It is destined to be one of the great transportation mediums of the country. Despite the production restrictions imposed by the war, more motor trucks were made last year than in any preceding twelve months, and a new high record production is assured for this year, the estimate made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce being for 327,930 commercial vehicles of all kinds.

The exhibit this week will include sixty different makes of trucks and small business wagons, in addition to tractors, trailers, and special types of bodies. Among the tractors will be the Fordson tractor, which was designed over a year ago by Henry Ford to aid the farmers in this and foreign countries in food production, and several thousand are now in use in England and France.

The commercial car exhibits will include every variety of type and capacity from the light half-ton delivery wagon to the heavy five and six ton trucks, their individual wheel bases ranging from barely 100 inches to long extension body creations capable of carrying elongated loads, as theatrical scenery, telephone poles, lumber, and other material. There will also be in the Garden over two hundred special exhibits of parts and accessories, including hard and pneumatic tires, for motor truck use.

While the war may not have caused entirely radical changes in motor truck design, its earmarks, nevertheless, will be noticed in many cases where models have been strengthened and built more substantial than at any time in the past.

A significant development of the increasing utility of the motor truck is the rapid growth of regular freight service. The term is broad in its scope and includes the use of trucks for hauling the products of the soil directly to a distant market or shipping point, thereby eliminating frequent handlings of the railroad, and the transportation of merchandise from the manufacturer direct to the retailer and consumer. The demand for transportation brought about by war conditions has made possible the development of this service. Several hundred companies have been organized and many of them operate large fleets of trucks over well-defined routes.

Windsor T. White, Chairman of the Motor Truck Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, calls attention to the fact that so great was the demand for motor trucks during 1918 that the production of American makers increased by almost 45 per cent. over the previous year, making 56,410 for the war and more than 175,000 for civilian use, as against 160,100, including 16,293 for the war, during 1917.

While the War Industries Board, to conserve iron and steel, required truck manufacturers not to exceed during the last half of 1918 one-third of their individual production during 1917 and the first half of 1918 for essential civilian uses, the aggregate output for all of last year was largely in excess of that for the preceding year. This was due principally to the great increase in the first six months. How large this increase was is indicated by the fact that from Jan. 1 to June 30, 1918, there were produced for civilian purposes 90,917 commercial vehicles, as compared with 109,865 during the twelve preceding months—more than 80 per cent. as many in one-half the time.

Production in the last half of last year was, because of the limitations set by the board and the inability of manufacturers to secure parts and materials, just about the same as during the first six months, the total output of civilian trucks for the year being very close to 175,000. This does not, however, represent the sum total of activity of the industry. In the twenty months from the entrance of the United States in the war to the signing of the armistice, the truck manufacturers accepted contracts for the production of 204,760 military trucks. During 1917 they delivered 16,293 and in 1918 completed 56,410 on war contracts up to December 1.

There was an insistent demand for many more civilian trucks than could be supplied last year and there was ample capacity to build them had the materials been available. Many of the leading manufacturers were devoting all their facilities to war work, so that they were unable to fill even the urgent demands of city street cleaning departments, public service companies, and factories engaged indirectly in war work. Schedules for 1919 contemplate an aggregate output substantially in excess of last year. Contributing to this great increase are facilities for production of at least 75,000 a year which have been or soon will be released from military truck work.

Several months will be required for the industry to get into full production on the new schedule, although it is in a better position to resume peace-time work than the passenger car industry, because truck manufacturers generally did not take on war contracts for work that was distinctly foreign to their regular operations. Their contracts were for trucks, and, in many cases, for their regular models.

Passage by Congress of a bill providing for the prompt adjustment and payment of informal war contracts will put a large amount of money into active circulation, and the decision of the War Department not to throw on the market the military trucks bought in this country will convince prospective purchasers that any hope of securing bargains by waiting to pick up such trucks is vain. Commodity prices and wages should also become stabilized and put an end to any uncertainty regarding tendency of truck prices.

Leading business men of America are unanimous in predicting a long period of industrial and commercial activity and prosperity, with tremendous foreign trade expansion. They point to the depletion of stocks of raw materials and manufactured good throughout the world that must be made good, the necessity for resuming building operations that were suspended during the war, the reconstruction necessary in Europe, the need for continued agricultural production on an extended scale, the plans for a large American mercantile marine and navy, the importance of the rehabilitation of the railroads, &c.

All such activities call for more and better transportation facilities, which means more highway improvement and greater use of motor trucks. As a result of the war, the country has learned many lessons in efficiency and economy, and appreciates better the capabilities and dependability of the motor truck.

The country is undergoing an important evolution in the matter of transportation. It is coming to realize that the highways are as essential to national development and prosperity as the railroads; that they are interdependent systems, and that the national bill for haulage under the highways under present conditions is much larger than the country's freight bill. Rural motor express lines are already bringing about changes in the farmer's life and methods of marketing his crops, and the Post Office Department is bringing the producer and consumer into close touch through the agency of motorized rural parcel post service. Great extension of these routes is planned, and the department has requisitioned 15,170 army trucks from the War Department for the purpose.

It is difficult to foresee any other future for the motor truck industry than one of great growth and prosperity, for the motor truck affords a means of transportation that has long been needed and which fills a vacancy between the railroads operating over fixed and costly routes and horse-drawn vehicles having a narrowly limited range of daily travel.

Motor Truck Conference.

A motor truck manufacturers' convention will be held this week beginning Tuesday at the rooms of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, 7 East Forty-second Street. Many of the important problems now confronting the industry will be discussed. Windsor T. White, Chairman of the Commercial Vehicle Committee, will preside. James I. Blakeslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, will speak on the motor truck requirements of the Post Office Department for the extension of the parcel post system, and Colonel Fred Glover of the Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., will explain some of the plans for the disposition of surplus military trucks here and abroad.

David Beecroft, who has recently returned from England, will tell something of the new foreign designs prepared for postwar business and discuss the opportunities for American motor truck sales in Europe.

By DONALD McLEOD LAY.

MEN who are recognized authorities on the subject of transportation have described the year 1918 as "the year the motor truck came into its own."

At the present time there are more than 400,000 motor trucks in use in the United States, exclusive of Government, State, and municipal vehicles, which are not obliged to carry State licenses. This number, which is more than twice the total truck registration at the end of 1916, does not include converted passenger cars, motor fire apparatus, &c. How rapidly the output of American motor trucks has increased since the beginning of the war may be seen from the following yearly production figures: 1913, 28,000; 1914, 35,000; 1915, 74,000; 1916, 98,000; 1917, 190,000; 1918, 250,000.

220 Active Manufacturers.

The increased production is the more impressive in that the number of manufacturers in active operation at the close of 1918 was about the same as at the end of 1913. There are now 273 motor truck makers listed, of which 220 are active, nearly all of them producing gasoline vehicles, although there are a number of electric truck makers and a few steam vehicle manufacturers. These concerns are spread over twenty-nine States, although most of them are in Michigan, Illinois, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. The wide distribution of the factories is of material aid in enabling truck users in almost any locality to buy their vehicles at a nearby point, which greatly facilitates the establishment and maintenance of service relations between the manufacturer and user after delivery.

A study of the registration of commercial vehicles by States at the end of 1918 discloses that there is some relation between the number of truck factories in a State and the number of commercial vehicles in use, bearing in mind, of course, the more potent factors of population, character and volume of the predominant occupations in the State. New York, for example, has 75,000 trucks, although it is the home of only thirty-three commercial car manufacturers; Michigan, with forty-eight truck factories, has a registration of 26,000; Illinois and Ohio each have more than 50,000 trucks, with thirty-nine and thirty-one plants, respectively; yet Massachusetts, with only eleven truck builders, has nearly 35,000 commercial vehicles.

More than 500 models of motor trucks are being built by the 220 active manufacturers. They comprise 480 gasoline types, nineteen electrics, and one steam truck, ranging from the light half-ton delivery wagon to the powerful road tractors of fifteen tons capacity. It is estimated that more than 300,000 commercial motor vehicles will be built during the coming year and that figure may be exceeded if conditions prove favorable.

At present the factories are, for the most part, endeavoring to get clear of war contracts, so that they can resume normal production. The readjustment will take some time, but when accomplished the factories will progress with greater rapidity and confidence than ever before. When it is considered that more than 100,000 trucks, or 40 per cent., were taken for military purposes, it is evident that a large market is waiting for the vehicles to be built this year.

Of the 40,000 Government-owned trucks in the United States, more than half may be turned over to the Postoffice Department.

Truck Engineering Progress.

War conditions greatly accelerated truck engineering progress and many valuable lessons have been learned by manufacturers and engineers. As yet, however, mechanical changes have been comparatively few, although there are several new developments and trends worth mentioning.

Engines, for example, are being made larger in relation to the load capacity of the trucks, the average size of engines for three-quarter-ton vehicles having been increased from 3¼ by 5 inches to 3½ by 5 inches, the horsepower increasing from 17 to 19½. In the other truck sizes a corresponding increase in the size and power of the engine will be found. More four-speed gearsets are making their appearance in the larger trucks. There is also a marked tendency toward placing the gearbox amidships.

Drive by side chains seems to be disappearing, less than 9 per cent. of the 1919 models having it as compared with about 70 per cent. five years ago. Worm drive has grown rapidly, having attained nearly as great an advantage for 1919 as chain drive had in 1914. Internal gear has also shown a large increase, while bevel and double-reduction types have become fewer.

One company has recently brought out a new type of double-reduction axle in which the second reduction is secured at the wheel instead of in the differential housing. This axle has been under development and test for several years and will probably form an interesting factor in the 1919 production of its manufacturer.

For trucks using solid tires the pressed-on type is used almost entirely. Pneumatic tires have held their popularity for the lighter vehicles, and the giant sizes are being extensively used on the heavier trucks.

Prices Are Higher.

Because of the high cost of materials and labor, there has been a general increase in truck prices for 1919, the average increase during 1918 being about 20 per cent. At present there is nothing to indicate that prices will be lowered. In fact, some manufacturers expect that it will be necessary to advance prices still further in the Spring.

Gasoline is still the only fuel in general use for motor truck engines, although there is some possibility that kerosene or some new fuel may be adapted to motor truck use in the future. For the present, truck engines and carburetors are being adapted to gasoline so heavy as to be almost kerosene. The new fuel developed at the Bureau of Standards in Washington has been described as consisting largely of bensol, which is too expensive to make by any of the known commercial processes to render it practical as a substitute for gasoline.

In respect to the load capacities of the motor trucks in use at the present time the small, light delivery wagons are most numerous. It is somewhat surprising to note, however, that the three-and-a-half-tonners are next in order, although closely pressed for this position by the one-and-a-half-ton and three-ton vehicles. Following is the estimated percentage of commercial vehicles of various load capacities in use in the United States at the end of 1918: three-quarter-ton and under, 50; 3½ tons, 11; 1 ton, 10; 1½ tons, 10; 3 tons, 8; 2 tons, 6; 5 to 5½ tons, 4; 2½ tons, 2; 6 tons and under, 1.

During the war, or since 1913, the 3½-ton truck has made the largest gain in number of models offered, forty-one being on the market for 1919, or more than seven times as many as were built six years ago. There has also been a large increase in the number of 2½-ton models. As compared with 1918, the greatest gain was made by the 1½-tonners, which are offered for 1919 in twenty-four more models than last year.

Roads the Great Need.

The heavier vehicles are naturally less numerous, since their field of economical usefulness is more limited than is that of the lighter machines. In some States there are restrictions on the weight and size of motor trucks allowed on the roads. It has been suggested that a Federal Road Commission be established to organize a national highway system, to be laid out, built, and maintained by the Government for both commercial and military purposes. Very little road building or repairing was done in the United States during the war, because of the shortage of labor and the excessive cost of materials. For this reason the roads are now in poor condition, and will require a great deal of repairing. From every section of the country come predictions that 1919 will be a great road-building year, which would indicate that it may be a great year for the motor truck industry.

Under War Conditions.

War conditions gave the motor truck its great opportunity to prove its practical value in terms of time and money, and, on the battlefields of Europe, in terms of lives saved and victory won. It is an old story now how motor trucks saved Verdun when the German avalanche seemed irresistible; every one knows how motor trucks and buses saved Paris from capture when the Hun hordes of von Kluck swept over the historic Marne; and, greatest of all, every American thrills with pride with the thought of the marines who rushed to the front in motor trucks to beat back the charging German hosts from Château-Thierry and flung them headlong into the great retreat that ended in the appeal for an armistice.

Similarly, though less spectacularly, motor trucks have won their business battles on the farms of New England and the Middle West, the cotton fields of the South, the ranches of the Western grain States, and in the lumber camps and mines of the Northwest, as well as on the rice fields and fruit ranches of the Pacific Coast. The United States Post Office Department has stated that its motor trucks are earning four times their cost. Before long it is planned to put 2,000 more trucks into postal service, operating on 600 new routes.

Return Loads Bureau.

Thousands of return loads bureaus have now been established throughout the country. These bureaus are simply points at which motor trucks that have delivered their loads can pick up return loads to carry back to their respective starting points. This means local Chambers of Commerce, &c.

One important branch of the nation's transportation will probably be entirely handled by motor truck before long. This is the network of short-haul branches, or "feeder" lines, which radiate from all the truck lines in well settled districts. Already, in a number of cases, the rolling equipment has been removed, the rails and ties torn up and the roadbed transformed into a highway on which motor trucks are performing the same service as the railroad used to give, but on a much more flexible and considerably less expensive basis.

If it were a question of the relative cost of constructing the short railroad line or the highway, the advantage would be with the railroad, but since the highways must be built, it would be uneconomical for the railroads to attempt to continue operation of short lines, perhaps in competition with motor trucks operated by other interests. Because of this and also because the farmer and merchant must deliver their products to the branch lines by motor truck, many railroads are replacing their "feeder" lines as rapidly as possible with their own motor truck systems.

ARMY MOTOR CORPS HELPED WIN THE WA

By LIEUT. CHARLES W. BERRY.
Motor Transport Corps, U. S. A.

EVERY stream has a source, which axiom may possess no special interest save for the purpose of establishing a starting point. The fountain head of the Motor Transport Corps was localized in 1903, when authorization for the procurement of one Oldsmobile was granted by the War Department. From that time until 1911 motor transportation for the army was under limited consideration, a few official reports being rendered covering the utility, practicability, &c., of power-driven vehicles for military uses, but judged by procurement and standardization the results were negligible. True it is that a small stock of machines, widely diversified as to make and type, was procured and tested under service conditions, but the conclusion may be asserted that the methods of army transportation up to 1911 had no pronounced deviation from those obtaining from the early days of the Republic—man, boat, rail, and, last but by no means least, the curse-absorbing army mule.

When the Villa Punitive Expedition had its first roll call, the motor truck took its position and answered "Here." At that time the Government possessed less than a hundred machines—the exact figures are eighty-nine—and of this about twenty were on duty in our foreign territory. The demand for trucks became imperative, and emergency orders prevailed. To meet the situation, a train was hired and this, carrying only the chassis of trucks and a hastily-secured civilian personnel for company organization, was driven at express speed and first right of way from a Great Lake city on the North to the Mexican border. Upon arrival, escort-wagon bodies were fastened to the chassis—twenty-seven thus equipped constituting a unit—the appropriate civilian personnel was assigned; a competent officer placed in command; and the convoy started South with its load under orders to make contact in shortest possible time with our American forces then far below the horizon in the sun-baked, cacti-studded terrain of Mexico.

In command of these companies were officers specially selected, clearheaded, fearless men; men of the tractor and not the pusher type, and every one made the delivery. These officers, with few exceptions, have retained their identity with the Motor Transport Service to the present day. General Drake, now Chief of the corps, was commanding officer of one of these companies; Colonel Furlow, now Deputy Chief, was also a company commander; and the officer who brought the emergency train from Cleveland to the border, Colonel Seaman, now Executive Officer, was supply officer and particularly active in his services along the entire border. Colonel Orton, came to the service from civil life in 1917, his selection as Chief of Service Division being based upon his technical experience as engineer, organizer, writer, and instructor. For many years he was Dean of the College of Engineering, Ohio State University.

When, in April, 1917, the Congress of the United States placed the lives, fortunes, and sacred honor of its charge—the American people—on the altar of liberty the field of activity which attached to the Motor Transport Service became of stupendous size. On June 14, 1917, the first convoy of five ships, under the protection of the navy, sailed with American forces, and its total motor equipment was 128 Packard one-and-a-half-ton new chassis, two Cadillac touring cars, three motor cycles, and four Nash quads. The Cadillacs, Nash quads, and two of the motor cycles belonged to the marines. One of the Packards became damaged, and was used for its spare parts. Therefore, 127 Packard chassis and one motor cycle constituted the equipment of the Motor Transport Service, but with limited spare parts, miscellaneous supplies, no oil, or gasoline. The arrival of the second American convoy brought the quota of the Cadillac touring cars up to thirty, but there were no spare parts, and the batteries had been packed dry. Operation, however, was effected. Rope makes a fair substitute for the standard tire, but such use is observed to be highly conducive to remarks carrying more force than elegance.

It early became apparent that every cubic foot of ship space must be utilized for men and munitions, rather than bulky material; and even before that transatlantic call for assistance, "For God's sake, hurry up," had reached the White House trucks had been relegated to the second table, with mighty slight chance of the meal being served on time. Trucks were in demand "over there," and it naturally became incumbent upon the Motor Service "A. E. F., France," to produce results in the procurement line. Europe was literally dragnetted from the North Cape to Gibraltar for everything in the motor line possessing sufficient vitality to move, gasp, or stand an injection of gasoline. The resultant haul was astonishing in diversity of type, dissimilarity of species, general tendency to crass cussedness, and a grinning disregard for the laws of nature or man.

American genius and initiative came in answer to the "S O S" of situation. Shops of stupendous size unprecedented capacity were provid operated with a highly-trained and s cialized personnel; and fully equip with wonder-working appliances and chinery. The results were notable prompt in arriving. The "invalid were rebuilt, repaired, or resuscitate record-making periods. As to efficie in repair work, let the following i dent be typically illustrative: Place, overhaul park to the south of Chate Thierry; time, July 8, 1918; employ 1,500 Motor Truck Corps men; co tions obtaining, the American fo had been ordered into the lines, du the situation at the front being parti larly bad and the French needing a Speedy action was essential and tru to transport the Americans were orde from the overhaul park, and a surpr ingly brief time limit set for readin of the trucks. In this park there w about 600 trucks—a few convalesce but the majority in varying stages chronic dissolution or relapse. At t expiration of the time given, 580 truc were in condition for use and lined ready to move. They did move t troops, 14,500 men, and on sc schedule.

Another matter for some consider tion: The spare parts required for t diversified types amounted to the r spectacle figure of 80,000 varieties, (a proximately 4,000,000 parts being carri in stock at all times.) Each and eve spare part has its particular place a function in its special machine, a substitution was impossible.

The different makes of American a foreign passenger cars in actual use b the A. E. F. at the high point of co lection number approximately 170— very respectable showing.

While the shipment of motor vehicl from America was temporarily suspended, let it not be inferred that activit looking to the supplying of personn and material had for one insta slackened. In fact, it must be recorde that the automobile industry of Americ had crystallized into one unit of unprecedented efficiency, to which must be credited to a major extent the termination of the war. Their co-operation and collaboration have been perfect, and hav enabled the Motor Transport Corps t effectively meet the unprecedented demand for trained men, for motor vehicles, accessories, spare parts, an many other elements. This is as perfec a sample of American loyalty as th history of the war affords.

The Motor Transport Corps establishe large camps, each devoted to the purpose of meeting demands from the battle front.

The program as created and perfected met the demands of the emergency; i adapted automatically to the present armistice, or a complete peace; and ye perfectly adjustable to a resumption o hostilities, or to demands highly intensified over those which have heretofore been presented. As to material shipped to the A. E. F. from April 24, 1917, to Dec. 31, 1918, by the Motor Transport Corps, the records show there were 110,911 vehicles and 15,468 tons of spare parts. About 1,200 vehicles repose on the ocean bed of the Atlantic.

The following table, compiled from official sources, shows the number of motor vehicles in use by the American Expeditionary Force, as of Dec. 15, 1918:

According to the report of the Secretary of War for the fiscal year end June 30, 1918, the Motor Transp Corps had 2,700 officers and 77,000 men. Automatic equipment carried over for the year 1918 amounted to $353,000,000. The appropriations for motor transportation for the same period were $[illegible],000,000, of which the sum of $250,000,000 had been expended or is applicable to contracts remaining in force. About $99,000,000 is considered necessary for repair shop and equipment service program, and $6,000,000 for demobilization and liquidation of vehicles left on hand. The equipment carried over into the fiscal year 1920 represents the sum of $732,000,000. This report also states that up to the date of its rendition the following have been completed for the army: 82,500 standardized and commercial types of trucks, 16,000 motor cars, 27,000 motor cycles; 22,000 bicycles, and a large number of trailers. The Motor Transport Corps had on hand at this time the respectable balance of $501,696,824 from appropriations.

BIG TRUCKS USING PNEUMATIC TIRES

Provide Elements of Greater Efficiency in Long Hauls on Rough Roads—What Tests Have Shown

By H. W. SLAUSON, M. E.

THE passenger automobile has always been looked upon as the synonym for comfort and ease of riding. To the motor truck, on the other hand, has always been attributed hard steering and bone-breaking riding qualities. The reason is not difficult to find. The pneumatic tire has made possible passenger car development to the point where sustained speeds of thirty to fifty miles are common, with no succeeding discomfort to the occupants and no injury to the motor and running gear. Air is still the cheapest and most effective shock absorbing medium. This is because of its compressibility, which will allow great variations in the size of the container in which the same quantity of air may be stored.

A pneumatic tire is none other than a tight air container, and if the volume of this container is reduced by reason of increased outside pressure due to contact with a large stone, rut, or other inequality in the road, no other effect is produced than a temporary increase in the pressure of the air; whereas, with a tire composed of solid rubber, the same stone or other inequality in the road would make a smaller "dent" in the rubber, because this medium is only slightly compressible, and whatever shock absorbing qualities it may possess in itself are due to its replaceability or "flowing" qualities.

Manufacturing difficulties encountered in the production of large-size pneumatic tires, coupled with the high cost of such fabrication, have, until recently, resulted in a well-defined size limit, above which it was deemed impractical to produce them. Inasmuch as the carrying capacity of a pneumatic tire is directly dependent upon its air volume, the diameter of the cross-section, or air-containing space, constitutes the factor determining the size of truck upon which such a tire may be used. Consequently, with a tire manufacturing limit of five and a half or six inches for this dimension, the motor truck of two tons capacity has represented the maximum commercial use of pneumatic tires.

With the increase in efficiency and delivery speed created by war demands it has been found necessary to overwork many of our motor truck fleets. The speed of a three or five ton truck is normally restricted approximately to twelve and ten miles per hour respectively, but it is an easy matter for engine designers to increase the power developed and to change the range of allowable governor revolutions so that speeds of twenty, thirty, and even forty miles an hour might be theoretically possible. What would happen to passengers, cargo, and even the truck mechanism itself if commercial vehicles were driven at such speeds for a sustained period of time can easily be surmised. No freight or express handled under these circumstances could be guaranteed as to its condition at destination; no driver's nerves could long withstand such vibration as would result, and no steels or alloys yet produced could long postpone the fatal "crystallization" or "fatigue" bound to result from such concentrated and severe punishment.

With such restrictions in the war activities of motor trucks placed squarely before the tire manufacturers, means were found to overcome the difficulty, and the result has been the development of pneumatic tires for commercial car purposes which, although still more or less in the experimental stage, have demonstrated the practicability of driving five and even seven ton trucks, fully loaded, at speeds which would put to shame the best efforts of a touring car of a few years ago. In order to test such tires thoroughly and to demonstrate their practicability under certain conditions, an express service between Boston and Akron has been maintained for over a year. Seven three and five ton trucks comprised the fleet, and by the use of pneumatic tires the running time for the round trip of 1,500 miles was reduced from two weeks to four and a half days—and this with no greater resulting damage to cargo or physical condition of the crew than would be expected from the ordinary twelve-mile-an-hour pace of the solid tire-equipped truck.

Recently a more severe experimental trip was made with two trucks of the same fleet across the continent from Boston to San Francisco and return by way of Los Angeles and the Santa Fé trail. This trip was successful in every respect and demonstrated that a fully loaded five-ton truck could be expected to negotiate roads or trails open to the average touring car. The total distance covered was 8,520 miles, and the average speed maintained during the running time was 14¼ miles an hour. When it is realized that much of this route traversed deep sand and mud, and that a portion was negotiated during the wet season when many touring cars were held up by the imagined impassability of the road, it will be seen that the average speed on the hard-surfaced stages of the highways must have been well above that considered legal in the majority of States for the ordinary touring car. The weight of each of the two trucks, fully loaded, was approximately nine tons. It is scarcely to be wondered at therefore that the principal difficulty encountered was the inadequate strength of many of the bridges and the necessity for their reinforcement by the truck crews.

The use of such enormous pneumatic tires—eight, ten and twelve inches in diameter of cross section—presents many difficulties which must be solved by the truck designer as well as by the truck owner. If the principal advantage to be gained is the increased speed allowable, with no corresponding damage to the load from vibration, the truck designer will find it necessary to increase the power developed by the engines. This has been undertaken in several instances, such, for example, as the use in a three-ton truck of an engine designed for a five-ton vehicle. A further change in truck design made necessary by the possible future development of large size pneumatics is the reduction in truck weight through the practical elimination of harmful vibration, even at the high speeds of travel of thirty or forty miles an hour. The riding sensation on a fully loaded five-ton truck is as comfortable as that in the expensive and finely balanced touring car. It is stated by some advocates of the use of pneumatic tires that such equipment will enable a thousand pounds to be saved in the dead weight of a three or five ton truck, for axles, frames and other parts ordinarily subject to the devastating effects of vibration. This would logically mean a reduction in cost—but it would also mean that a truck designed for use of pneumatic tires should not be run on solid tires.

BETTER ROADS FOR MOTOR TRANSPORT

Increased Commercial Use of Automobiles Raises New Highway Problems—Speed Regulations

BY ARTHUR H. BLANCHARD,
President of the American Road Builders' Association and the National Highway Traffic Association.

THE problems now confronting the highway engineer are entirely different from those which existed fifteen years ago. At that time the motor vehicle was not a factor. Today about six million motor vehicles use our highways, of which nearly 10 per cent are motor trucks. War conditions rapidly developed highway motor transportation. The practicability of using the motor truck as a rapid, safe, and economical carrier of freight under unfavorable conditions has been repeatedly demonstrated during the last two years. The achievements of highway transport in competing with railways on short hauls have been especially successful.

Two influential factors stand out prominently in comparing short haul transportation by railway and highway. First, economy in handling freight; terminal haulage and railway transport requiring, on the average, six handlings from shipper to consignee, while highway transport usually calls for two handlings. Second, rapid delivery; for example, on fifty-mile hauls, the use of railway transport requiring from three to four days against an average of one day for transportation by motor truck. The reconstruction period finds users of motor trucks analyzing cost records of intercity haulage, rural motor truck express routes, and other motor truck tansportation services. The results justify the assertion that the United States is to witness, within the next five years, a phenomenal development of motor truck transportation on highways outside of cities.

Present Highway Situation.

Today there are in the United States 2,500,000 miles of rural highways, 12 per cent. of which are classed as improved. A conservative estimate would indicate that not more than one-fourth of 1 per cent. of the total mileage is suitable for motor truck trunk highway traffic. Many improved highways do not meet the requirements of motor truck traffic because of poor drainage, inadequate foundations, narrow widths of roadways, unsuitable wearing courses, or weak bridges.

At present there is no system of highways in the United States comparable to the national system of France. Indications point, however, to a rapidly developing sentiment and demand for the creation of a system of interstate highways aggregating at least 50,000 miles which shall be constructed and maintained under the supervision and at the expense of the Federal Government. Such systems of highways as we now have are developed through the individual or co-operative action of our State, county, and township Governments. The development of systems in many parts of the United States is in a chaotic condition, due primarily to local jealousies, defective laws, and poor administration.

Highways constructed under the supervision of many State departments are of many kinds, and represent a wide range of maximum load and total tonnage carrying capacity. These variations are characteristic of highways of different classes ranging from interstate trunk highways to local feeder town highways leading from the farm to the nearest railroad station or village. In somes States all types varying from a gravel road to a stone block pavement will be found on a given intercity highway. Defective State laws are partly responsible for these conditions in some States. For example, in New York the law requires that the funds from bond issues be divided upon a basis which allots a certain percentage to each county. The demands for maximum mileage have resulted in spreading out over many miles the available funds in some counties, and the utilization of methods of construction obviously unsuited to the traffic to which the highways will be subjected soon after they are opened to travel.

The development of motor transportation will emphatically emphasize the fallacy of the present New York laws covering the financing of highway improvement. Motor transportation is not going to develop upon any artificial county basis. Motor truck traffic on trunk highways usually will be dependent upon interstate, intrastate, and intercounty traffic. Therefore the main trunk highways of the future, which will be built with high first-cost foundations and surfacings, must be designed to carry through traffic as well as the local county traffic. As at least 60 per cent. of the State funds now used for highway improvement in the State of New York is obtained from the first-class cities, it is ridiculous for county officials to attempt to justify a county basis of distribution of State funds derived from State bond issues.

Present methods of administering, financing, constructing, and maintaining highways and bridges outside of cities are inadequate to meet the demands for the proper development of the commercial, agricultural, industrial, and social interests of the United States.

Future Highway Improvement.

Plans must be made for the construction of new roadways and the reconstruction of worn out roadways of the main trunk highways with six to ten inch cement-concrete foundations, with roadway widths of not less than twenty feet and with surfacings of bituminous concrete, cement-concrete, brick or stone block. Likewise highway bridges must be made strong enough to carry the heaviest loads which are permitted on the highways of which they form a part. Motor transportation interests should demand that such plans be developed at once. A nation-wide educational campaign must be started to bring highway officials and the public to a realization of the undebatable requirements of motor transportation which are not to be characteristic of any section of the nation, but will rapidly develop in every State as soon as continuous stretches of good roads are built.

Financing Highways.

A justifiable program of financing improvements must be equitable for the general taxpayers and the users of highways. A practical plan, which meets these conditions, calls for the payment of the cost of original construction by appropriations from current revenues or bond issues and the assessment of the cost of maintenance against the users of the highways.

The contention that highways should be constructed with funds provided by taxpayers is based on the advantages of good roads to the nation, county, State, or town as a whole. The general benefits which may be credited to good roads are as follows: Development of commerce, industries, agriculture, natural resources, and intellectual and social life; decrease in the cost of transportation and the development of methods of transportation; facilitation and development of tourist travel; increase in land values, fire protection, and rural population; development of rural free delivery and highways of value in military operations.

If the cost of maintenance of highways is to be borne primarily by the passenger car and the motor truck, the highways should be so constructed as to be suitable for the traffic to which they are, or will be, subjected during a reasonable future period. For example, a broken stone road on a highway between two cities twenty-five miles apart, subjected to 500 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger cars a day, would have to be reconstructed at comparatively short intervals, with a resulting excessive maintenance charge. If this highway had been constructed of such types as bituminous concrete, brick, cement-concrete or stone block on a cement-concrete foundation, the maintenance could reasonably be charged to the users of the highways.

As another example may be cited a brick pavement on a thin foundation of broken stone, located on such a highway as that between New York City and Albany. Under the five-ton motor truck traffic to which this highway will be subjected during the next few years, such a roadway would not last one year on account of the inadequate foundation. To charge the reconstruction of the foundation and wearing course as a financial liability to be met by passenger motor car travel and motor truck transportation is an unjustifiable system of financing.

Motor Truck Regulations.

An early agreement relative to uniform State regulations covering speeds, weights, and dimensions of motor trucks is of the utmost importance, as the present diversity of opinions and wide range of requirements of State laws vitally affect the economic development of highway improvement and motor transportation. Such regulations should be considered from two standpoints. First, an agreement relative to speeds, weights, and dimension of motor trucks which will be built in the future, so that manufacturers and users of motor vehicles on the one hand and highway officials and engineers on the other hand may have definite guides for future development of motor trucks and the economic and efficient construction and maintenance of highways. Second, an agreement is desirable as to an equitable and practical method of enforcement of regulations covering motor trucks and motor transportation based on the present conditions of highway systems and the present demands of essential and reasonable methods of motor transportation.

THE U. S. STANDARD TRUCK.

Designing Engineer Tells of Its Origin and Success.

Some interesting facts were related last week by J. G. Utz regarding the origin of the United States standard truck at the meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers. Mr. Utz for several months was in charge of the Motor Transport Engineering Department, which assisted in designing the present standard truck. He said that the Quartermaster Department recognized the importance of motor truck transportation six years ago, and when in the Mexican campaign in 1916 the desirability of limiting the number of designs became evident.

The United States Army bought its first 1½-ton truck as late as 1913, and by 1916 it had accumulated experience with but a limited number. In that year Colonel C. B. Baker, then chief of transportation in the office of the Quartermaster General, invited the Society of Automotive Engineers to send representatives to Washington to confer with Army officers and representatives of about fifty truck builders in the preparing of specifications for a standard 1½-ton and a 3-ton truck.

Shortly after the declaration of war on Germany Colonel Baker's staff entertained hopes of having a completely standardized military truck, and new drawings were made. On Oct. 1, 1917, all details were completed, and ten days later one sample war truck each of Classes A and B were ready for testing.

The General Staff authorized the production of 10,000 Class B trucks. The work was distributed among seventeen truck builders, each to make 500 to 1,000 trucks. The first five trucks were available Jan. 10, 1918. By April, 1918, production was proceeding so satisfactorily that the General Staff authorized the purchase of 8,000 more trucks, and in August, 1918, an additional 25,000 were authorized, but the armistice was signed before the last order was far advanced.

It has been clearly demonstrated, said Mr. Utz, that the Class B trucks are not equalled in performance by any other type of truck used overseas.

$300,000,000 for Highways.

Estimates of contemplated highway expenditures in the United States for the season of 1919 place the total at approximately $300,000,000. Because of governmental restrictions the amount was considerably lower in 1918, while in 1917 it was placed at $280,000,000.

MOTOR TRUCK LINES FOR RURAL EXPRESS

Rapid Development of New Form of Highway Transportation Throughout the Country

By F. W. FENN,
Secretary, Rural Motor Express Committee, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

IT has been said that when things have grown so old that they were almost forgotten they again become new and are adapted to meet our present-day needs, and transportation over the highways is one of them. In the utilization of modern methods we have perfected transportation on land and sea, but the former was over steel rails. The coming of the motor truck filled that need, and it came at a time of national peril.

At the outbreak of the war the crying need of the world was food. In order to encourage greater production the rural motor express came into being for moving the foodstuffs raised by the farmer with the greatest dispatch over the highways to the centres of population. Secretary Redfield recently said that you may build the railroad up until it is ten blocks wide and fill the rivers with steamers and still the farmers' transportation needs are unserved, so the motor truck becomes the source of supply of food.

The motor truck has also been the medium of final distribution for the food arriving at tidewater for our men overseas, for the conditions imposed by war, causing constant moving of troops, made it impossible to do this by rails. So it is safe to say that food did win the war, for without it bullets and men would have failed, and as every dealer should do his utmost to encourage the organization of rural motor express lines, he should either get others to operate them or operate them himself, as many are doing, for, aside from serving his country in a vital necessity, he is serving himself.

The Governor of Colorado recently set aside by proclamation a day to highway transportation, which resulted in the formation of hundreds of lines in all parts of the State. The Colorado Highways Transport Committee reports that farmers throughout the country will have in use 300,000 trucks by the end of the year, and will retire 1,200,000 horses. Every horse displaced means five more acres of land that can be devoted to raising food for human beings.

Several new transportation companies have been incorporated in Colorado and are trying out the new idea of making regular trips daily between towns situated from thirty to fifty miles apart. One of the most recent incorporations is controlled by a group of dairymen from Castle Rock, Col., who have combined their business opportunities with the general advances of economic distribution of farm products. The company has several trucks which make regular trips to Denver, a distance of thirty-two miles, bringing to the metropolis dairy products and returning with a load of small wares to be dropped at towns along the way. Fruit, vegetables, milk and eggs arrive in market or direct to the door of the consumer fresh and desirable on the day they leave the farm and command the highest market prices. It is regarded by agricultural experts as the most encouraging and potent indication to the farmer that no matter what his production his produce will find a speedy way to market.

The Highways Motor Transport Company of Cleveland, Ohio, has been operating rural motor express lines out of that city to Sandusky on the west and Ashtabula on the east, taking in all way stations. It is operating a fleet of ten six-ton trucks. Last Spring a large business was developed in handling hothouse vegetables from Geneva and Ashtabula to Cleveland. When fruits and vegetables began to come in the trucks transported 20,000 crates of berries and 25,000 bushels of tomatoes from the farming districts to the Cleveland markets. They were followed by 20,000 bushels of apples, peaches, and beans.

During the grape season the company hauled 84,000 baskets of grapes, part of which went to the wine presses and part to the markets. Seven hundred baskets were carried to the load, which made 120 truckloads of grapes alone. The average haulage distance of these grapes was 37½ miles and the charge was approximately $7 per ton, and the loads hauled approximated seven tons. Empty baskets were hauled on the return trip. The round trip of each of these trucks brought in about $77. Troy trailers were used in some cases, of which the company has two five-tonners.

A large company, capitalized at $300,000, entitled Automotive Transports, Ltd., is operating out of Toronto to London on the west, and Hamilton and Buffalo on the south, taking in all way stations. Twenty-five trucks, including ten five-ton vehicles, are used. The company is under the direction of Lieut. Col. W. S. Dinnick and some of the leading business men of Toronto. Warehouses are located in principal centres. The company expects to make a profit of $100,000 on the first year's business.

The Highways Motors Transportation Company of Spokane, Wash., is incorporated for $100,000, all paid in. It was organized by the leading business men of that city. It is using sixteen large trucks, and is operating over nine different routes. The company has all the business it can handle, being 68,000 tons minimum per year by the different routes.

J. D. Eggleston of the International Harvester Company points out what has been accomplished in Iowa by motor trucks in the way of hauling livestock. He says that trucks have hauled livestock to the packing houses in Iowa, eliminating the use of cars entirely, representing 225,600 head of hogs, 23,408 head of cattle, and 61,402 head of sheep. This would amount to 6,250 cars, or 250 trainloads. The livestock was hauled by farmers owning their own trucks and by the sixty-one trucking companies operating trucks in the State, hauling freight and express from cities to small-town merchants and livestock on return trips.

The rural motor express comes to us of necessity, comes to us because the need for it is so greatly felt in this period of reconstruction, as it was during the war. Rails and water will only partially serve, while the highways are the natural arteries, reaching every man and bringing the world to his door.

As good for your radiator as oil for your engine

That's the wonderful thing about PYRO Alcohol—it not only gives certain protection from freezing but is actually good for the car's cooling system—water jacket, radiator, pump and connections.

These are the compelling reasons why the Government uses PYRO in the Army, Navy and Post-office motors.

And these are the very same reasons why you should make sure you get PYRO when you buy a non-freeze. Warning: Most chemical non-freezes on the market are based on calcium chloride. Of these the U. S. Bureau of Standards warns: "Calcium chloride compounds should be used with caution if at all, on account of their corrosive action."

PYRO is on sale at garages and filling stations, grocery and department stores, druggists, and paint and hardware stores.

How To Use PYRO
1. Determine capacity of radiator in gallons.
2. Fill radiator with water.
3. Draw from radiator enough water and substitute same quantity PYRO to meet following conditions:

16⅔% Solution—1 part PYRO and 5 parts water will not freeze at 20 above zero.
20% Solution—1 part PYRO and 4 parts water will not freeze at 10 above zero.
25% Solution—1 part PYRO and 3 parts water will not freeze at zero.
33⅓% Solution—1 part PYRO and 2 parts water will not freeze at 10 below zero.
50% Solution—1 part PYRO and 1 part water will not freeze at 25 below zero.

When necessary to replenish, use a mixture of 1 part water and 4 parts PYRO.

PYRO also makes a wonderful cleaner for windshields and windows, as it does not freeze on the glass. Also an economical fuel for chafing dishes, spirit lamps, percolators, etc.

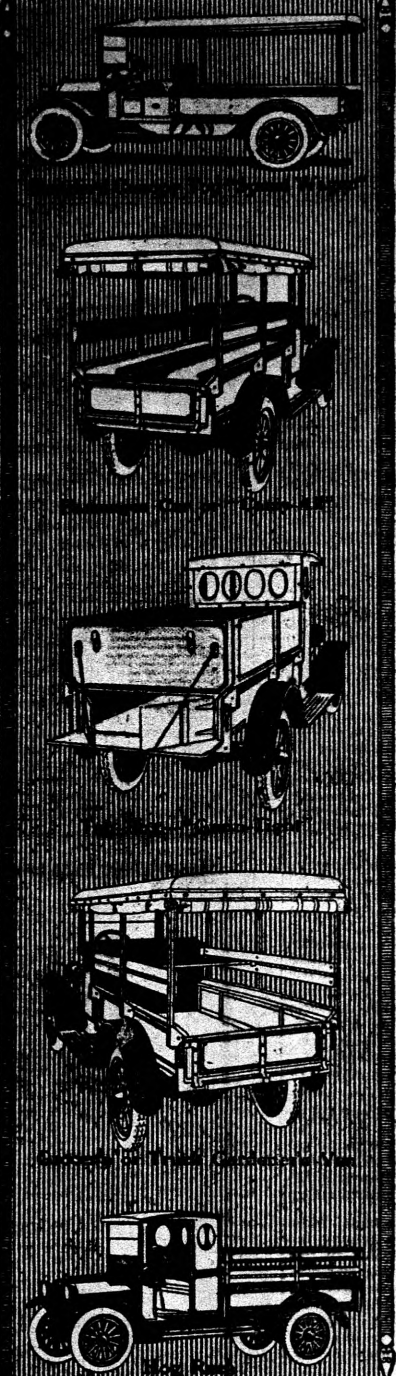
REO



Here's a Genuine Novelty In the Motor Truck Show

Novelties are rare in a Motor Truck Show—it is a pretty serious business and one naturally expects to see coldly practical things mostly.

But this week there is a real novelty on exhibition and something wonderfully practical at the same time.

You will find it in the Reo booth—the Reo "Speed Wagon" equipped with the new Reo convertible all-purpose body.

This body evidently fills a great need and covers a broad field if we are to judge by the tremendous interest it has created wherever shown.

Space does not permit even a brief description here and anyway, you will have to see it to appreciate its many points of superiority and its great adaptability.

So many are the possible modifications of this body, the chances are about ninety-five in one hundred that it will exactly fit your own special needs.

Mr. Truck Owner

How long will you put up with experiences like the above, when over 50,000 ESSENKAY users have solved the problem?

Placing Essenkay in Tire

Did you ever stop to figure what punctures and blowouts cost you per month in delays, loss of time, business, etc.?

Do you realize that there is an ABSOLUTELY POSITIVE SOLUTION to this problem—that will eliminate forever blowouts, punctures, wasted time and consequent expenses, and, moreover, make your delivery 100 per cent. perfect?

Essenkay

A TIRE FILLER

Not a Liquid! Rides Like Air!

Is the answer. Thousands of the largest business concerns in America have found it so—the United States Government, newspapers, prominent manufacturers, department stores, municipalities—in fact, more than 50,000 passenger car and motor truck owners. It is pretty safe, therefore, to follow where thousands have found the way safe and profitable.

ESSENKAY is a flexible, light and highly resilient material that looks like rubber, has all the desirable flexible qualities of finest Para rubber, yet it contains NO RUBBER IN ANY FORM and has none of the imperfections and weaknesses of rubber. It is not a liquid, therefore cannot leak out of the tire.

Investigate this successful substitute for air in tires. Look into the EVIDENCE of what ESSENKAY is doing for BIG BUSINESS. Find out why level-headed executives are adopting ESSENKAY as a NECESSITY of delivery equipment.

Doubles Tire Mileage

Your tires filled with ESSENKAY are always at a uniform pressure—cannot be deflated or run flat. 10,000 to 20,000 miles on ESSENKAY filled tires is the rule, not the exception.

ESSENKAY comes in sections to fit into all sizes of casings and fills casing completely. It can be installed on all types of rims.

It will last as long as your car. No spare rims, no spare tires, no tubes, no pumps or jacks are required.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL

Test it in your tires under your own loading and road conditions. If your car carries five people, crowd in eight. If your truck carries a ton, put on two tons. Ride over the roughest roads you can find. Allow the car to remain under maximum load on a concrete floor for a day or two to prove that ESSENKAY does not flatten. Then—if at the end of ten days you are not convinced that ESSENKAY rides like air—that it will end your tire trouble—that you will no longer be bothered with punctures, blowouts or slow leaks—return it—THE TEST WILL COST YOU NOTHING.

ESSENKAY Is Guaranteed against being affected by heat, cold, water, mud, friction, atmospheric or climatic conditions, hardening, crumbling or flattening.

Send for free booklet, "The Story of Essenkay" and full particulars of our 10 days' free trial offer. Or telephone us.

AMERICAN TRACTORS IN WORLD DEMAND

Over 150,000 in Active Use Here—Farmers in Middle West Take Lead in Adoption of Motor Machinery

By GUY H. HALL,
Secretary Kansas City Tractor Club.

THE growth of the American tractor industry has been remarkable. In 1912 there were only 11,000 tractors manufactured in the United States. By 1918 the total output approximated 150,000. From present indications it is predicted that in 1920, over 300,000 tractors will be in use in America. The potential tractor market in this country exceeds 1,250,000. By this is meant that there are farms in the United States which can be far better and more quickly worked with less labor and greater returns with tractors than without. The number of tractors to meet this demand would total over one and one-quarter millions not including replacements. This staggering figure does not include the demands of Europe, Asia, Africa, or South America. These estimates seem all the more remarkable when one considers that they are the outgrowth of only a few years' development. So-called quantity production of the one-man tractor, pulling a two-bottom gang plow, was reached in 1914.

The tractor today is recognized as of fundamental importance in motorizing the farm. The methods of the past are unsatisfactory and inefficient in these times of progress when the farmer must face radical changes in production. The tractor has no rival when it comes to both extensive and intensive cultivation. Since colonial days, the motif of American agriculture has been extensive, rather than intensive, farming, and this will doubtless continue to be the standard of our crop production until some future time when the density of population may force some other course upon our posterity.

America has attained her eminent position among the nations of the world, because her system of agriculture releases two-thirds of her population to other activities, while Europeans—exponents of intensive farming—are, in a measure, serfs to the soil. Expansion of acreage per man has been the mother necessity behind the evolution of the farm tractor. As the agent of extensive farming, the farm tractor performs its greatest function, placing the farm on the same economic basis as other industries when mechanical efficiency is substituted for obsolescent human labor.

As a result of his quick adaptation to power farming machinery, the American farmer stands today the greatest individual food producer in the world. When we speak of power farming machinery, our minds naturally revert to the tractor, which in reality is the farmers' portable power plant, easily performing all nature of work hitherto left to man or beast. The most striking characteristic of the tractor is its efficient versatility. The enormous quantity of work of varying nature it can do at such small cost makes the tractor the greatest farm machine of all time, and an economic necessity where increased production is desired at a saving in actual labor and expense.

At present Illinois leads the Union, possessing more than 6,000 tractors. Kansas is a close second, with Texas, Iowa, North Dakota, Ohio, and Missouri following in their respective order. These seven States have a total crop valuation of $4,126,894,000, using over 30,000 tractors on 22 per cent. of their entire acreage. Can there be any doubt as to the future of the tractor industry after the potential market offers such opportunities in only seven States? The total crop valuation for 1918 is estimated at $21,000,000,000; the total live stock at $8,000,000,000 for the same period. Here is a total of $29,000,000,000, representing the money value of one year's output of American farms. Is farming our biggest business? Let the above figures answer.

Anything that produces more crops in the same time, or which reduces the hard work which the city fellow usually associates with agricultural pursuits, is of importance to every man, woman, and child in our land. With improved farming methods the natural order, our farm folks will be more prosperous, more contented, and bomb-proof against the lure of the city. The tractor has something more back of it than drawbar or belt pulley power; it is gradually revolutionizing the countryside. Give the tractor a few more years—then take an inventory of the results.

Considering the cost of horseflesh—even with the demobilization of horses used for war purposes causing a lowering of the prices—the tractor has it all over the one-time old reliable of the farm. It requires five to six good horses and two two-bottom gang-plows to accomplish as much as a light, one-man tractor. But it is not the primary cost that counts so much, for there is the bother and trouble that horses mean, that is saved when a tractor is substituted and the farm is motorized.

American tractors were favorably known in Europe before 1914, but the war resulted in thousands of tractors being shipped to England, France, Italy, and other countries of the Old World. Domains and estates of the gentry were cultivated day and night to defeat the German U-boat program. The late Lord Rhondda, Food Controller of England, is quoted as saying that American tractors saved England from starvation. We all know how tractors—as armored tanks—enabled the British to break the Hindenburg line before Cambrai, and later brought about the débâcle which hastened the retreat of the Kaiser's armies from French soil. In far-off Mesopotamia, the American-made tractor was an important factor of military value in defeating the Turks.

Now with peace assured, the ancient granaries of the Near East will see tractors from America in practical, every-day use in their fields where for centuries the primitive wooden plow was the only implement used. A merchant from Bagdad is now representing several American manufacturers. At Basra, the Port of Bagdad on the Persian Gulf, facilities are ready to handle immense importations of American-made farm machinery, principally tractors. In Asia Minor, the tractor is helping the descendants of the Prophet garner more wheat than prayers and oxen ever made possible before. In Mesopotamia, where the lamented General Maude blazed the trail for democracy, tractors are seen in ever increasing numbers.

American manufacturers, in order to meet the export demands efficiently, are studying foreign conditions—eliminating certain parts, adding other features, so the American tractor can be used satisfactorily under the varying climatic and topographical conditions of the different countries. As a result, American-made tractors are being used as efficiently on the uneven Piedmontese ground of Italy, the lava fields of Hawaii, the sandy wastes of Algeria, or the barren steppes of Russia as on the fertile prairies of Kansas, in the cultivation of grains, cotton, sugar cane, vineyards, rice—practically every form of vegetation cultivated in civilized countries. At the present time economic necessity is forcing the use of the tractors, but by the time the present crisis is past American-made tractors will be firmly established throughout the world.

Four years ago a few men in Kansas City had a vision. These men were dealers in and distributers of farming implements. They beheld the tractor being offered as the cure-all for agricultural ailments. It was merely a question of selling tractors in those days; service meant nothing—at least not what it does today. These men banded together, formed the Kansas City Tractor Club, and proposed to hold a tractor show.

The first annual national tractor show was a crude affair, compared to the successful exhibitions which have come later. For the third show last year a new building was erected on the Union Station Plaza, containing approximately 75,000 square feet of floor space. Over 80,000 farmers came to the show and over $3,000,000 worth of tractors and implements were sold.

The fourth annual national tractor show will be held in Kansas City from Feb. 24 to March 1. The new building now being erected will be the largest temporary structure ever constructed in the West. More than 100,000 square feet of floor space has been sold up to date. Practically all manufacturers of tractors will have one of several models on display. Every accessory intended for tractors and recognized as having value will be on view.

A representative from England will be on hand to see what America has to offer Great Britain in the way of improved tractors and implements. France will have a delegation of agricultural experts, especially interested in the equipment for the devastated areas of the northern departments. Italy will be represented by Major Santanna, who was a visitor at last year's show. Others will be in Kansas City to consider tractor farming for China and Japan.

Rural Motor Express on Long Island

A rural motor transportation company has been established to serve all points on Long Island and arrangements have been made with many shippers for the New York markets. The operating company is incorporated under the name of Long Island Motor Transportation Company, with offices at 1,847 Broadway. There will be a receiving depot in New York and a large central depot in Long Island City.

TRUCK SHOW NOTES.

The small Maxwell truck in the show represents the result of a design which had two years of preliminary tests and engineering try-outs before it was offered to the public. In a performance test last year a Maxwell truck crossed from San Francisco to New York in seventeen days, with a capacity load and one man driving the entire distance. It averaged 200 miles a day.

In the last two years Dodge Brothers have supplied to business interests and the armies here and abroad thousands of their business cars. They are especially made for light delivery. The Colt-Stratton Company, dealers in New York for the cars, will have several on exhibition at the show.

The Overland trucks in the show are of two models, one known as the delivery wagon express type, 800 pounds capacity, and the other the 1,200-pound delivery wagon. The bodies are of pressed steel, with flaring sides, equipped with curtains to protect the contents and driver in stormy weather, and with electric starter, electric lights, electric horn, and speedometer.

The Bethlehem trucks, made by the Bethlehem Motor Corporation of Allentown, Penn., are of the 1½, 2½ and 3½ ton capacity.

A marked improvement in the design of heavy duty motor trucks has been announced by the White Company, Cleveland. The three and five ton trucks will have a new drive system known as double reduction gear drive, in which the usual side driving chains and sprockets are replaced by a set of gears enclosed in the rear wheels, running in oil, and driven through a live axle of the floating type.

Fred Colver, manager of the Day-Elder truck department of the Colt-Stratton Company, has installed an Idle Truck Bureau, the purpose of which is to keep Day-Elder trucks running. He has also organized a Rural Motor Express Information Bureau, and is ready to answer all questions concerning the practical application of motor trucks to the rural express idea.

J. B. Crockett of the Clyde Cars Company, manufacturers of Clydesdale trucks, believes that the motor truck is going to prove the biggest factor in solving the transportation problem in every large city throughout the world. An initial order of 260 Clydesdale trucks is being shipped to Tokio for motor bus service.

The newest Denby truck model is a 3½-ton commercial vehicle. A variable frame length can be supplied, making the truck adaptable to any class of body from the long vans to compact dump bodies. The Denby trucks are made in from one to five ton models.

The Acme truck is made in one, two, three and a half, and five ton models, the five-ton type having recently been added, taking the place of the four-ton truck, now only made on special order.

HOW DO YOU BUY TIRES?

INDIVIDUAL car owners buy tires partly on the basis of experience, but largely on faith. Many of them do not keep accurate mileage records, and few indeed know at the end of the year what has been their tire-cost per mile.

The owner of 6 to 600 commercial automobiles has given serious thought to the economical operation of his business, or he would not need 6 to 600 cars. He really buys mileage and not tires—the price per tire is not uppermost in his mind—what he wants is the largest number of miles for the smallest number of dollars.

90% of STERLING Tires are sold to men who figure on a brass tack basis. We demonstrate to them that while STERLING Tires are not the lowest priced, they are lowest in cost-per-mile of service. We either demonstrate this or we do not get the orders.

MOTOR NASH TRUCKS

THE unusual interest in the Nash truck line evidenced at this time is perhaps heightened by the knowledge that more trucks, we believe, were built by the Nash Motors Company during the war for military purposes than were produced by any other maker.

The Nash Motors Company built nearly thirteen thousand Nash trucks for military service.

This preference of the Government for Nash products is readily understood upon close inspection of the many superior mechanical features of Nash truck construction.

For example, owners are quick to appreciate the automatic locking differential with which all Nash trucks are equipped. This feature, besides saving fuel and tires, enables Nash trucks to make surer and safer deliveries with no time out because of weather or road conditions.

Reasonably prompt deliveries can be made to immediate buyers.

"Have you ever sold anything?" we asked Mrs. Lucy R—— when she suggested that she'd like to place our custom-made corsets.

"No," she replied, "but I'd like to try."

We concluded to give her a trial. After a day or two spent in learning how to fit corsets, Mrs. R—— started out.

When she checked up Saturday she found she had taken nine orders during the week, and had earned $36 in commissions. That was six weeks ago. Since then Mrs. R—— has gained steadily.

We can use a half dozen women like Mrs. R——. You remain right here in New York—the position is permanent. Mrs. R—— is busy, happy, and independent. She has no special talent—you can do as well. Write B 90 Times.

Long Island Property Sold.

Colonel Frank H. Ray of Manhattan purchased from Sara W. Coe, wife of Dr. Henry Clarke Coe, her property known as "Buena Vista," adjoining the Huntington Golf and Marine Club. The place consists of two acres with residence, garage with living quarters, stable, and green house. L'Ecluse, Washburn & Co. sold the property, which was held at $50,000.

Westchester County Sale.

The last piece of vacant water front in Larchmont Manor, consisting of one and one-third acres, has been sold by John Nie[illegible]son through Howell C. Perrin. The property is located at Ocean and Bay Avenues, adjoining the home of the late William E. Bemis, Vice President of the Standard Oil Company. For many years it was owned by the estate of Charles [illegible]. Murray, which once refused an offer of $100,000 for the place.

Mrs. Livingston Middleditch sold her residence in Walworth Avenue, Greenacres, Hartsdale, to Joseph A. Ford for occupancy. The property, which overlooks the Bronx Parkway, was held at $25,000, and was sold through Maxwell Smith.

New Jersey Sales.

James & Harry Berkowitz, candy manufacturers, bought from James E. Osborne of Harrison a plot at 359 and 361 Plane Street, on which they will erect a factory from plans by M. J. Nadel. Mrs. L. B. Folley has exchanged the residence at 812 and 814 South Twelfth Street, Newark, for a building at 80 Bank Street, which will be remodeled for business purposes. Louis Schlesinger, Inc., negotiated both transactions.

Commercial Leases.

The Burroughs Adding Machine Company has leased a large portion of the first floor in the Emigrant Savings Bank Building, 51 Chambers Street, for use as a school for prospective operators. Thomas J. O'Reilly negotiated the deal.

Girard Brothers, Inc., leased from George A. Kennedy the buildings at 438 and 44[illegible] West Seventeenth Street, through the Duross Company.

The United Jewelers, Inc., represented by Julius Fogg, leased for ten years, at a total rental of approximately $300,000, the entire second floor of the Winfield Building at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fortieth Street, from the F. W. Woolworth Company. Edward J. Hogan made the transaction.

Stillman Estate Sells Fifth Avenue Corner as Site for Apartment House.

OVER $2,500,000 INVOLVED

Two New Dwellings to be Erected on a $200,000 Site—Bronx and Suburban Sales.

The largest recent deal on upper Fifth Avenue was closed yesterday when the vacant plot on the north corner of Seventy-second Street was sold for immediate improvement with a twelve-story apartment to cost over $1,500,000.

The land, which was sold by the James Stillman estate to the Hudson Investing Company, Fred F. French, President, has a frontage of 62½ feet on Fifth Avenue and 172 feet on Seventy-second Street. It brought well over $1,000,000.

Ground will be broken at once for the new structure which, it is claimed, will be the finest apartment house ever erected. There will be only twelve apartments in the house, each one occupying an entire floor and containing thirty rooms.

Directly opposite, at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Seventy-second Street, is the twelve-story apartment house put up a few years ago and in which the rentals are understood to be the highest paid in the city.

William A. White & Sons represented the buyer in the transaction and the Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company the Stillman estate.

Buys $200,000 Site for Residences.

Another important deal in the same section involved the sale of the two 25-foot dwellings at 42 and 44 East Sixty-ninth Street, valued at $200,000, to a buyer who plans two interesting additions to the fine east side residence colony. The property, which is between Park and Madison Avenues, was sold by William B. May & Co. for Mrs. N. H. Herzberg and Mrs. S. H. Abrahamson.

The purchaser will raze the present dwellings and erect a modern English basement residence. The remaining 22 feet he will reserve for another fine residence. Henry L. Moses represented the buyer as attorney.

This block is considered one of the most attractive on the entire east side, containing the homes of many prominent citizens. Among those who have erected costly homes in this vicinity in recent years are Arthur Curtiss James, George Blumenthal, Henry P. Davison, Augustus G. Payne, Carl D. Jackson, Henry Sloane, Percy Pyne, Charles Lane Poor, and Mrs. Winthrop.

Getting Back to Business.

"Getting back to business" is to be the keynote of the twenty-second annual banquet of the Real Estate Board of New York, to be held next Saturday in the grand ballroom of the New Commodore Hotel, Forty-second Street and Lexington Avenue.

From all indications this banquet will be one of the largest, in point of attendance, ever held by the board, according to Elisha Sniffen, Chairman of the committee, who reports that more than 1,500 applications for reservations have been made.

Among the speakers who will address the assemblage are W. Bourke Cochran, Job Hedges, Walter Stabler, Controller of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and Dr. Charles Alexander Richmond, President of Union College.

Among those invited to sit at the speakers' table are Charles Evans Hughes, Travis H. Whitney, Theodore P. Shonts, Henry Morgenthau, Charles L. Craig, Controller; Morgan J. O'Brien, Abram I. Elkus, John J. Fitzgerald, Laurence McGuire, Major Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Thaddeus C. Sweet, Captain John P. Leo, Frank L. Dowling, Jacob A. Cantor and Robert E. Dowling.

FINANCING CONSTRUCTION.

Suggestion That High Rate of Interest Would Attract Capital.

By ARTHUR W. WARNER,
Of the New York Building Managers' Association.

Apartments and business quarters are so badly needed that unless something is done soon to erect more buildings the city's growth is in danger of coming to a complete standstill. All the broad areas, which have been brought within easy reach by city and private investment in the new subway system, remain idle and bring no relief to crowded millions, at great loss to all.

To get adequate relief, something in the nature of a building boom must take place. There can be no building boom except through the efforts of builders with comparatively small capital, who are willing to risk their mite, shoulder the burden, and work hard and faithfully in the hope of making a relatively large profit.

The idea expressed by building material interests, that the "shoestring" builders be eliminated and building on a grand scale commenced by builders with 25 per cent cash, reckons without its host. There are not enough builders who have the money this would require to create anything remotely resembling a boom.

Before there can conceivably be any general building done on a large scale a means must be found to finance these small-margin builders again. This cannot be done by life insurance companies, title companies, and like institutions, which financed them when building costs were low; when they were overburdened with money, and when years of satisfactory experience justified confidence in the permanency of cost values.

Lending interests are being criticised for not meeting the material interests half way in encouraging new construction, by not making loans on present building costs. The fact is forgotten that most institution lenders are primarily bankers, and the taking of trade risks is not within their province. They are confined to lending money where no risk exists, beyond a reasonable doubt, as to the safety of principal, and until building costs and rents have become settled, and property is marketable on the basis of such higher costs, these institutions may not consistently increase their loan basis.

Some other means must be found to fill the gap between what the institution lenders can consistently lend and the sums these builders must have. The security offered consists of that type of safety and risk represented in Wall Street by preferred stock—safer than the equity, but not quite first mortgage material. I think, perhaps, this might best and most quickly be accomplished by attracting toward real estate a class of lenders able and willing to take some risk in return for a share of the profits, but without themselves engaging in the building business.

The obstacle in the way of this now is the usury law, and this would have to be appropriately modified to permit the paying of interest rates for second mortgage money on real estate high enough to attract the money needed. With this new tool to work with, real estate and mortgage enterprise would find a way to raise all the money necessary, and the building business would soon be flourishing again on a worth-while scale.

The fear of construction costs dropping back to prewar prices seems remote to me, but whatever risks lurk in such a possibility by themselves are no conclusive arguments against building. It merely means that rents must be obtained at sufficiently higher than the normal net to liquidate the excess building cost within a time during which such excess rents, if such they prove to be, may with certainty be maintained.

In many classes of building, leases could be made at the outset for periods long enough to accomplish this result. Then if costs drop nothing will have been lost, while if they do not drop a larger profit would result.

The rate of interest at which money can be attracted in volume into real estate, in competition with the rate of yield which many secure bonds and stock now offer, is also a fruitful subject of consideration, both on first and second mortgage security.

I have prepared a table which may be of interest in this respect, illustrating the respective income which each 10 per cent. of a property's value should bring by order of its priority, if the whole property's value springs from a net basis of 8 per cent, free and clear:

Last	10% earns	20¾%
9th	10% earns	12¾%
8th	10% earns	8¾%
7th	10% earns	6¾%
6th	10% earns	5¾%
5th	10% earns	5¼%
4th	10% earns	5 %
3d	10% earns	5 %
2d	10% earns	5 %
Prior	10% earns	5 %

Percentage of value by priority of interest.

First 40% takes min. risk rate,5%
1st 50%—5.05%
1st 60%—5.167%
1st 70%—5.39%
1st 80%—5.81%
1st 90%—6.58%
Total value—8%

From this scale—which, by the way, purports to be nothing more than an arbitrary ideal apportionment between priority interests—it will be seen that whereas the property free and clear would yield 8 per cent., the holder of a mortgage or other preferred interest amounting to as much as 40 per cent. of the value is entitled to but 5 per cent., while if there was, for instance, a second mortgage of 30 per cent. of the value behind a 60 per cent. first mortgage, the holder of such second mortgage would be entitled to receive the average of 6¾ per cent, 8¾ per cent., and 12¾ per cent.; namely 9.41 per cent.

In practice, of course, other elements, such as the value of a bond, the integrity of a borrower, the term and circumstances of a mortgage, would add more or less to these percentages. But they do indicate the propriety of a modification, with proper safeguards, of the legal interest rate for second mortgage loans, temporarily at any rate, as a means of raising money for building construction in order to provide needed accommodations, to say nothing of building up the territories opened by the new subways, and the increased taxable values for the city which would result therefrom.

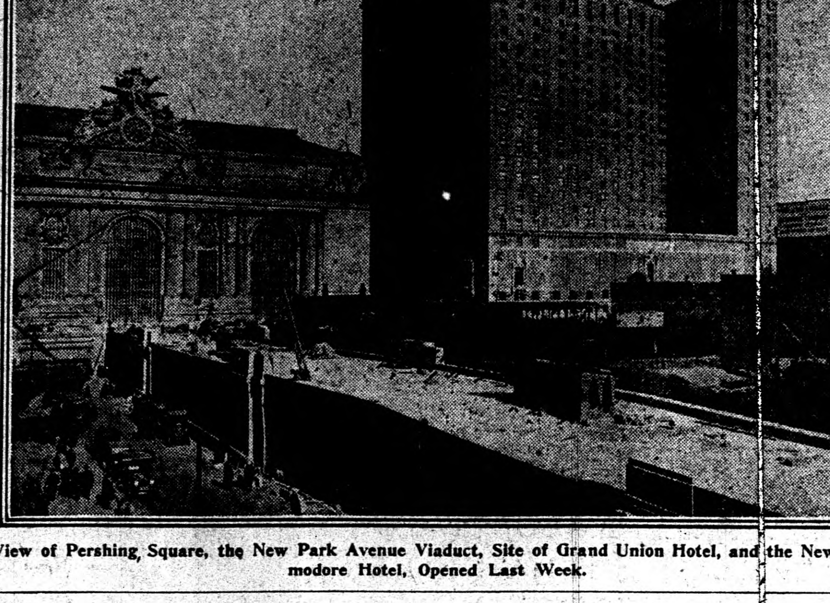
PLAN TO CREATE NEW PUBLIC SQUARE ON EAST FORTY-SECOND STREET

Business Men Favor Making Site of Grand Union Hotel on East 42d Street an Open Plaza—Property Owned by City



View of Pershing Square, the New Park Avenue Viaduct, Site of Grand Union Hotel, and the New Commodore Hotel, Opened Last Week.

The creation of a public square upon the site of the old Grand Union Hotel, Park Avenue and Forty-second Street, fronting on Pershing Square, is being advocated by the Forty-second Street Association, the Merchants' Association, and others.

Edward W. Forrest, Managing Director of the Forty-second Street Association, said yesterday: "It is vitally essential at this time that our city officials be shown the necessity of retaining and establishing 'Pershing Square' as a plaza or open park.

"The business uses of Forty-second Street and the streets in the vicinity are in their inception so far as the business conditions are concerned, and which will obtain in the future with increased requirements for the circulation of traffic, vehicular and pedestrian.

"Apart from the economic considerations, it will be a source of satisfaction not only to the people of the city, but to all who come in and go out from this focal centre of transportation, if Pershing Square be made a public plaza and if its centre be occupied by a statue of General Pershing.

"In behalf of our association I have today requested the Public Service Commission to order the contractors to remove the derrick and old dilapidated buildings which have remained on this site since they were used on subway construction work. We also are asking to have the surface leveled.

"The expense of this is infinitesimal, and if autos were allowed to park there, even temporarily, it would greatly relieve the present congestion caused by their lining up along the curb on both sides of Forty-second Street in that vicinity.

"Borough President Dowling stated last week that he objected to the completion of the plan to make a plaza of Pershing Square on the ground that it meant a loss of revenue to the city which would be received from the sale of the property for a building site, but I feel confident this will be more than offset by the convenience to the public and added revenue to the city through increased assessments.

"A proposed resolution to turn Pershing Square over to the Department of Parks is now before the Committee on Finance and Budget."

John McE. Bowman of the Hotel Commodore, facing Pershing Square, which was opened to the public last week, said: "The proposed change at Pershing Square is a matter of economic value to the city. It will give needed additional space to surface traffic of trucks and motor cars, and it is required for the intake and outlet of the surface public travel entering and emerging from the subways at this point."

Paul B. Boden, Managing Director of the Hotel Manhattan, said: "Pershing Square will afford breathing room among the surrounding skyscrapers which will necessarily soon encircle it. Today some 100,000 persons go in and out of the Grand Central Terminal every day, and this number is increasing from year to year."

Walter J. Salmon of Walter J. Salmon & Co. said: "If the change is not made, and instead a skyscraper is built upon the site of the old Grand Union Hotel, which is now known as Pershing Square, Forty-second Street at this point in a few years will become a cañon reproducing more crowded conditions than obtain today in Nassau Street at noon. The City of New York is noted for the paucity of its parks or breathing spaces and for the number of places where the absence of foresight involves the realization of these Nassau Street conditions."

James Wood, Vice President of the company owning the Hotel Belmont and Murray Hill Hotel properties, said: "It will enhance surrounding real estate values and assessments and should involve increased return to the city from annual taxes."

The Committee on City Plan of the Merchants' Association has submitted the following report on the subject:

"Your Committee on City Plan, to which, by action of the Board of Directors, was referred the subject of making the site of the old Grand Union Hotel a public park, reports as follows:

"We understand that the site of the old Grand Union Hotel, at the southeast corner of Forty-second Street and Park Avenue, was acquired by the municipality in order to permit and facilitate the construction of the Lexington Avenue subway line.

"So far as your committee is aware, no final disposition of this site for future purposes, now that the subway construction is practically completed, has been made.

"The suggestion that that site be devoted to the purposes of a public park meets with the unanimous approval of your Committee on City Plan, which committee, therefore, recommends that the association support a movement to that end. In making this recommendation we are animated not only by patriotic motives in giving real foundation for the name of Pershing Square, which name, we understand, has already been applied to the street intersection, but also because that particular point in the city is one of very considerable congestion, due particularly to the construction and operation of large hotels and of the Grand Central Station in the immediate vicinity. The devotion of this plot to park purposes would insure some relief from lack of proper light and air."

TRANSIT IMPROVEMENTS TO SPUR BUILDING REVIVAL IN THE BRONX

Demand for Apartments Far in Excess of Supply---New Fields for Construction Work That Will Be Opened to Builders by Additional Lines of Rapid Transit

By EUGENE H. ROSENQUEST,
Ex-President of the Bronx Board of Trade.

The Bronx is but awaiting the spur of prospective early transit improvements to be the scene of the greatest building revival that the City of New York has ever known.

According to the opinions expressed by prominent realty operators, there never was a time in the history of the borough so propitious to building—never so great a demand for living accommodations here as exists today—and now that the restrictions on building are rapidly being removed, which will be followed, almost undoubtedly, by more nearly normal supply, labor, and money markets, nothing else is needed to spur building activity beyond the betterment of transit conditions.

So far as the West Bronx is concerned, better transit has been afforded that section since the morning of Jan. 2. The West Side "L" trains (Sixth and Ninth Avenues) are now, during the morning and evening "rush" hours, operated from Kingsbridge road on a three-minute headway, and from Woodlawn road on a nine-minute headway.

This does away with the shuttle train entirely during the "commission" hours, and has made for a substantial betterment of the rapid transit service along the whole Jerome Avenue subway extension, which taps the West Bronx section.

An additional improvement will come later in the year with the betterment of train inspection facilities, when the Lexington Avenue subway trains will be operated further north on Jerome Avenue than 167th Street, which is their present terminal.

Only when the subway trains and West Side "L" trains jointly run to Woodlawn road, in accord with the planned use of the Jerome Avenue extension, will the West Bronx get the service ideal.

However, builders are already preparing to start activities in the West Bronx during the Spring of 1919.

Hunt's Point Section.

Since midnight of Jan. 7 the trains of the Lexington Avenue subway route have been operating across 138th Street, and north on the Southern Boulevard to Hunt's Point, thus giving to that fast developing section a transit increment for which it had waited long and patiently.

While it is true that the new transit facilities for the Hunt's Point section had already been largely discounted by realty operators in that area, I expect to see great building activity there this Spring.

The North Bronx.

Along White Plains Avenue, also, I expect to see considerable building activity during the year, especially if the Bronx Board of Trade is successful in having the subway service bettered. While it may not be possible to have all the trains run through from East 180th Street to 238th Street, or 241st Street, it does seem possible that the shuttle service there can be eliminated by running every third or fourth train through, and it is along this line that the board is now working with the Public Service Commission and the Interborough.

The East Bronx.

A residential area for the most part, the East Bronx will also feel the effects of the resumption of building activity.

While, through an unfortunate series of circumstances, this section has not as yet received the transit relief to which it is entitled, some of the steel for the subway extension through to Pelham Bay Park has arrived, and more will be coming along in the late Spring, making it a possibility that trains will be operating out there in the late Fall, or the Spring of 1920.

These factors will doubtless give heart to those who have heretofore been hesitating to build in the East Bronx.

Webster Avenue Extension.

Besides the Westchester Avenue extension, there remains but one other part of the dual subway system to be completed in the Bronx. That is the extension of the Third Avenue "L" along Webster Avenue, from Fordham Square to Gun Hill Road, and across Gun Hill Road, connecting up with the White Plains Avenue extension of the old subway.

The necessary steel to complete this line will soon be forthcoming, with the prospect of trains operating in the Fall.

This should cause quite a bit of building activity in the Webster Avenue area.

Building in 1918.

From the foregoing, however, it should not be assumed that there was no building activity in the Bronx last year. According to the records of the Bronx Building Bureau, there were plans filed in 1918 for new buildings, the estimates of cost totaling $3,991,900; while in the same period there were filed 1,641 plans for alterations to existing buildings, at estimated costs totaling $1,215,400. These figures compare favorably with those for the year 1917, when there were 640 plans for new buildings, at costs aggregating $8,54[illegible],475, and 2,397 alteration plans at costs aggregating $1,580,885.

The estimated costs of plans for new buildings filed in 1916 were $16,123,782; and in 1915, the Bronx's best year, the total estimated costs were $25,897,950.

Considering the fact that the Government's restrictions on building, in addition to a high materials and labor market and a tight money market, were reflected in a building slump throughout the country, and throughout the City of New York in particular, the Bronx is proud of the fact that the falling off here in 1918 was no greater than the falling off in any of the four other boroughs of the Greater City.

It is noteworthy, though, that the plans filed in the Bronx in 1918 were primarily for industrial plants, garages, and business structures, whereas the building to be done in 1919 will be principally dwellings, to accommodate the many thousands who want to live here, and who at the present time cannot be taken care of in existing dwellings. Apartment-house construction will be pre-eminent in 1919 building activities.

General Conditions.

General business conditions in the Bronx during 1918 were unusually good despite the war factor, and that the populace of the Bronx enjoyed a prosperous year cannot be gainsaid in the face of the wonderful subscriptions to the Third and Fourth Liberty Loans, and the generous responses to the Red Cross, War Fund, and other war-activity fund appeals, not to speak of the fine results of the recent Red Cross Membership Enrollment Campaign.

As to the industrial aspects of 1918, investigations made by the Bronx Board of Trade would seem to indicate that, while the number of male factory employes fell off, due to the war, the number of female employes was increased in proportion, keeping the total laboring population at approximately 74,000, the figures for 1917.

The payrolls in the 2,250 industrial establishments, however, showed a decided increase for 1918, totaling approximately $81,000,000, as against $45,000,000 in 1917.

TIMES SQUARE IS ITSELF AGAIN

Times Square is Times Square once more. Almost simultaneously with the signing of the armistice and the promise of a lasting peace, quiet and peace have come to a district which for practically the entire duration of the war has resembled the surface plant of a busy coal mine or a portion of some major operation on a busy sector of the western front.

After a year of waiting for the fulfillment of the promise to clean up the square, the work has finally been accomplished almost over night. The trenches have been covered over, the pipes which swung overhead removed, and the Swiss châlet, often suspected by out-of-town visitors to be some sort of an unusual, and, therefore, fascinating restaurant, has been taken down and carted away.

The city's reward for its patient acceptance of war conditions which made the confusion at Times Square last for such a long period is the large subway station, with increased transportation facilities, at this point. Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins, who did the work in this section, were under contract to restore the surface of the square to its original condition, and, although the underground passage from the Broadway passage of the Broadway subway has been open for nearly a year, they have just been able to do the work.

The contract for the Times Square section of the Broadway subway, which included Broadway from Thirty-eighth Street to Fifty-first Street, was awarded Sept. 8, 1915, and the Interborough began work on the Seventh Avenue line between Thirtieth and Forty-third Streets Feb. 24, 1914. The torn-up condition of the square has lasted since the beginning of the subway work.

No one is more gratified at the cleaning up of the section than James B. Regan, proprietor of the Hotel Knickerbocker.

"Times Square is in better condition today than it ever has been," he said in commenting on the recent clean-up. "There is no doubt that the corner of Forty-second Street and Broadway is the heart of the world, and never again should it be permitted to become the confused mass of pipes, machinery, and débris that it has been for the last four years. Its extraordinary traffic makes it imperative that it should always be kept in perfect condition. I believe that had the city departments, the gas, water, and electricity corporations, co-operated the work which has so recently been completed could have been finished in a much shorter time. If one piece of work could have been completed without interruptions, during which the streets were opened only to be closed in a few days, the whole job might have been carried through in half the time."

William C. Muschenheim of the Hotel Astor said that he was much pleased to have the space in front of the hotel opened up again. "Not only does it give pedestrians on Broadway a chance to see what the Astor looks like," he said, "but it permits the hotel's patrons to enter the building without running the risk of falling into excavations as they have for the last few years."

CITY REAL ESTATE VALUES

For the purposes of comparison with other cities or to approximate debt limit or bankruptcy possibilities and other more or less idle calculations New York realty is generally taken at the assessable value base. The Tax Department figures the value of taxable realty at $8,339,638,851.

That represents only a partial valuation, however, for there is much property which does not appear in tax lists; for instance, the city itself in the way of schools, police stations, parks, bridges, firehouses, and other municipal necessities, not to mention land held idle taken for school purposes and other future needs, which is estimated as having a value of $1,707,664,450.

The United States, in forts, navy yards, custom houses, assay offices, hospitals, and other possessions, totaled this year a value of $69,625,500. The State has city property worth $7,349,035, and churches and religious organizations occupy tax-free properties to a value of $415,447,817.

Should all property in New York City be taxable the levy would be based on $10,539,725,653.

NEW TAX LEGISLATION.

Mayor's Committee on Taxation Submits Six Proposals.

Nathan Hirsch, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation, made public yesterday the proposals of the committee, seeking to relieve New York City property owners from excessive tax burdens. These suggestions were submitted on Saturday, Feb. 1, 1919, at a special meeting of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, called by Mayor Hylan, for the purpose of considering the city's legislative program.

The entire board was in attendance. Others present were Nathan Hirsch, Bryan L. Kennelly and Henry Bloch, representing the Mayor's Committee on Taxation; Corporation Counsel William P. Burr, Assistant Corporation Counsel William H. King, Walter Lindner of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, and Stewart Browne, President of the United Real Estate Owners Association.

After Chairman Hirsch, submitted the proposals of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation, the Board went into executive session, as a result of which Mayor Hylan announced that the matter had been referred to a special committee of two, consisting of Controller Craig and Corporation Counsel Burr, who were instructed to report back in connection with the legislative program as outlined by the Mayor's Committee.

This program, which has the written approval of President Cantor of the Tax Board, concerns itself with six distinct phases of the tax situation and calls for the enactment, not only of new constructive legislation but for amendments to existing laws and to the Greater New York Charter. They are the fruit of a long series of conferences, in which property owners' organizations, other taxpayers and citizens, who have concerned themselves with the taxation problem, participated.

Mr. Hirsch stated yesterday that he was not in favor of the bill proposed by the Real Estate Board, sponsored by Robert E. Dowling, which seeks to make the tax limitation rate of 2 per cent. effective at once. It is Chairman Hirsch's belief that were a law enacted making the rate limitation effective immediately, the credit of the city would be seriously impaired.

Nevertheless, Mr. Hirsch is of the opinion that a fixed rate is necessary and concurs with the belief of President Cantor of the Tax Board, that this rate should become operative in 1922. At that time the machinery necessary to collect the new sources of revenue would have been given an opportunity to be placed into motion and the entire movement directed toward the acquisition of new sources of revenue, would have passed out of the experimental stage.

Mr. Hirsch further believes that if the measures proposed by the Mayor's Committee are accepted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment enough revenue would be obtained, not only to meet the deficit resulting through the adoption of a fixed rate on real estate, but there would be a sufficient surplus to meet the normally increasing cost of municipal government.

In a letter sent to Mayor Hylan yesterday Chairman Hirsch said: "The fixed tax rate on realty not only affects the landlord, but the tenant. It will insure more building and will mean lower rents."

The proposals of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation have been divided into six groups, as follows:

First—Amendments to the personal property tax law.

Second—Amend franchise tax on mercantile and manufacturing corporations, increasing rate from 3 per cent. to 6 per cent., and providing for equal division of tax collected between city and State.

Third—Amend Greater New York charter: (a) Providing for a tax limitation on real estate to 2 per cent., to become effective on Jan. 1, 1922. (b) Reduce tax on personal property to one-half of 1 per cent. (c) Compel all taxpayers having personal property of more than $2,000 to file reports with Department of Taxes under oath, with penalty for failure to file or for making false report.

Fourth—New law placing tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on all insurance premiums collected within the State, the tax to be paid by the insurance companies.

Fifth—New law proposing tax of one-twentieth of 1 per cent. on all bank deposits, the tax to be paid by the bank, trust companies, &c.

Sixth—New State income tax law. The proposed legislation relative to the sixth subdivision relating to the new State income tax law is still in course of preparation by the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, which is working in conjunction with the Mayor's Committee.

BARGE CANAL TERMINAL.

Work in the Bronx Aided by Run of Good Weather.

Due to the continued run of good weather conditions, the work on the Bronx Barge Canal Terminal at 138th Street and the Harlem River has been advanced to such a degree that State Engineer Frank M. Williams, in his annual report to the Legislature, said concerning it:

"The terminal at 138th Street has been finished to a point which will permit us to undertake at once the work of grading and shed construction.

"At this terminal was experienced much difficulty due to harbor regulations made necessary by the military precautions covering the towing of excavated material to sea."

Writing to the Bronx Board of Trade on the same matter, State Engineer Williams says:

"The contract now in force is substantially completed and under the contract has been constructed a quay wall; the roadway approach and the termini site has been graded.

"Plans covering the construction of a permanent freight house and the paving of the site are well under way, and I expect to present these contracts to the Canal Board to permit of the actual starting of the work early in the Spring.

"The contracts involving the installation of machinery and miscellaneous equipment will be awarded when the progress on the construction of the warehouses will warrant the award of these equipment contracts."

The City's Gas Supply.

The gas companies of New York City made 47,037,084,000 cubic feet of gas in the fiscal year of 1918 and sold it at an average price of 81.37 cents per thousand feet, to 1,524,195 consumers.

LACK OF MATERIAL A CHECK TO BUILDING

Stocks Depleted by Government Demands and Little Hope of Reduction in Prices.

HIGHER WAGES A FACTOR

Construction Work for Several Years Will Be Circumscribed Only by Quantity of Production.

Building construction this year and possibly for several years will be circumscribed only by the quantity of building materials that can be produced to meet the demand, in the opinion of Allen E. Beals of The Dow Service Daily Building Reports.

"This does not mean," said Mr. Beals, "lower prices, although there are a great many owners who have been advised to defer construction work until the level of building materials sinks far below that now ruling. Neither does it mean, necessarily, skyrocketing of prices so as to make construction work prohibitive.

"Practically all building materials were ultra-negative as far as their use as war commodities were concerned. Vast as was the quantity of commodities utilized in the construction of cantonments and industrial buildings during the war period, the outflow represented mainly stocks on hand and reserves that were resold to the Government and to Federal contractors.

"The years of the great war that elapsed before this country entered the lists were years in which building material production was greatly reduced. There was little opportunity for replenishing stocks nor for operating plants at capacity. Therefore the demands upon mill, quarry, and kiln operators as well as timber owners, were centred almost entirely upon stocks in hand. These stocks were disposed of at Government fixed prices and the margin of profit was in every case crowded down almost to the vanishing point. The stocks were all but depleted when the war ended.

"The extent to which Government purchasing was carried in anticipation of needs of the war in the event of its prolongation is shown by the fact that on Jan. 20 the Government had on hand 14,516,000 brick, hardly more than the dealers of New York would carry in their yards over a normal Winter month as reserve stock; 2,235,403 pieces of hollow tile fir proofing, 350,000,000 board feet of lumber, including material for airplanes; barely 116,000 barrels of Portland cement; 77,560 barrels of lime; 29,226 lineal feet of flue linings; about a million feet of metal lath; about 2,000,000 feet of wood lath; about five million wallboards of all kinds; about 200,000 rolls of roofing material; about 50,000 rolls of roofing paper, 159,000 kegs of nails, 3,000 tons of reinforcing steel; about 600,000 lineal feet of sewer pipe, and about 900,000 wood shingles.

"These quantities were far below the expectations of those who had expected to find that the Government had been buying lavishly of materials for its needs, and the figures prove conclusively that there was really not any great surplus of building materials available for Federal use and for necessary non-war construction at the close of the building season 1918.

"In other words, there was barely 23 per cent. of normal building material stocks on hand in building material manufacturers' yards throughout the country when the armistice was signed. The hostilities, and, in consequence, the war buying, stopped after the building material manufacturing season had closed. These same yards had been operated as near to capacity as the amount of labor available would permit all during the war. Therefore depreciation had been heavy and organizations had been sadly warped, if not actually wrecked.

"Demobilization has not permitted these organizations to be resumed, and the amount of labor necessary to repair the plants has not been available because either costs have been considered too high or the uncertainties of the building market as viewed from Dec. 1, or thereabouts, were so great as not to warrant expenditures until something like the scope of the 1919 building market could be determined.

"The result is that no matter what stimulus is applied to building construction there can be no greater volume of construction this year than there is available materials to actually put into the buildings. Instead of building material manufacturers being ready for a normal year's construction of a billion and a quarter dollars for the entire country, these building material establishments cannot possibly produce materials for more than $500,000,000 worth of construction, including what small reserves they have on hand. Of this amount some must be shipped abroad. They are even now shipping American tile, mineral wool, oak, mahogany, plumbing fixtures, steel, metal roofing and metal ceilings, special composition boards and yellow pine, milled into window frames, sashes, and doors. The remainder will be made available to American building investors and what does remain will permit of barely 20 per cent. of normal construction based upon the totals of 1912.

"There have been recent reductions in the prices of certain building materials. These reductions are not in any way indicative of the trend of the market or the resale of cancelled Government specifications. These prices are based upon mill costs when this country had not yet gone to war. It represents for the most part materials that have been carried in stock, and are being sold at a sacrifice to induce building interests to proceed with construction now.

"These prices will not continue to come down, although further reductions may be expected from time to time until the middle of Summer. By that time new material will be ready for market. This material will be made at very much higher wage schedules and factory operating costs than were those that are now being offered. In consequence, prices will be higher and there will be a potential demand sufficient to carry the higher charges.

"This demand during 1919 probably will not exceed 40 per cent. of normal, if that, so that the manufacturers will probably be able to market practically all they can produce. The carry-over stocks into 1920 will be probably as light, if not lighter, than they are at present, so that, with labor and other conditions very much more stabilized at the beginning of the 1920 building season, there will be an actual demand far ahead of supply, with the result that high prices will continue to prevail.

"By the middle of 1920 it will be possible for the building material producers to get ahead of the demand to some extent, at least so that by 1921 speculative building will find a more favorable market and prices will be more within their reach. From the Summer of 1921 the greatest strides in catching up with the 46 per cent. of underconstruction will cover several years."

64 FOREIGN REDS ON THE WAY EAST TO BE DEPORTED

Train Passes Through Chicago with Two Carloads of Alien Prisoners.

ROUNDED UP IN FAR WEST

Some Are from Seattle, Where Bolsheviki and I. W. W. Started Big Strike.

ARRESTS MADE QUIETLY

Immigration Officials Determined to Rid the Country of European Anarchists.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Monday, Feb. 10.—The Chicago Tribune this morning prints the following:

Deportation is the answer of the United States Government to the challenge of I. W. W. and Bolshevist agitators who came to this country with the avowed purpose of stirring up trouble in industry and social life.

The first Federal blow against the wave of Anarchism already launched on the Pacific Coast came to light yesterday when fifty-four labor agitators passed through Chicago in two heavily-guarded tourist sleepers bound for immediate deportation from an Atlantic port.

A motley company of I. W. W. troublemakers, bearded labor fanatics, and red flag supporters were huddled in crowded berths and propaganda-strewed compartments of the prison train, which slipped in and out of the city so quietly that few Federal officials were aware of its existence. As far as is known, no movement of the kind has ever before been attempted by the Government and the train blazed a trail which, immigration authorities agree, will entirely solve the greatest danger of an industrial unrest during the reconstruction period.

Three leaders of the Seattle uprising, one prominent Spokane agitator, a dangerous I. W. W. leader from Denver and five alien convicts arrested in Chicago, were among the prisoners gathered into the Federal net and now well on their way toward the land of their birth, after trial and conviction as undesirable citizens.

The remainder were alien labor agitators picked up by officers of the United States Immigration Service during a year of quiet campaigning in industrial centres of the Pacific coast.

They were guarded by fourteen heavily armed immigration officers, who paced up and down the length of the train from the time it reached the Chicago yards until it pulled from the city with clearance orders over all traffic. A. D. H. Jackson, chief of the Seattle office of the Immigration Service, was in command.

Dragnet Set Two Years Ago.

"The proceeding against enemies of this type is simple," declared an official with the train. "Just two hours before the Seattle strike was called we had gathered forty agitators into these cars with everything cleared away between them and the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. For more than a year the Immigration Service has been working quietly in all industrial centres, checking up on the strange aliens who appeared during war months and gathering evidence against I. W. W. leaders and trouble makers who call themselves Bolsheviki.

"When the evidence was compiled against this particular crew each case was brought to a Federal hearing, and all court findings sent to Washington, where they were reviewed by Secretary of Labor Wilson. The Secretary has the power to order this type of prisoner deported or released, and so far there has been little trouble in getting quick action.

"While labor circles were seething with trouble along the coast, our prison train slipped out for the Atlantic long before strike leaders were aware that some cherished members of thir organization had lef their midst. We picked up additions to the party in Spokane and one joined us from Denver.

Habeas Corpus Failed.

"The surprise seemed to take the wind from the sails of the agitators. Only one man rebelled when told of Uncle Sam's decision to rid the country of his presence. He got out a writ of habeas corpus against deportation, which was promptly quashed by a Federal Judge in Spokane. The courts have opened every facility and given every co-operation in this work."

When the prison train reached Chicago, red flags that waved from the cars on the first day's run, I. W. W. banners, and strike placards were piled on the littered tourist berths which held all of the earthly goods of the prisoners. One I. W. W. songbook, with its flaring red cover, was propped in a car window, but it was hastily removed when a big guard passed by and tapped on the glass. The prisoners seemed thoroughly cowed and convinced at last that Uncle Sam means business in dealing with their class.

"We let 'em howl and wave the red flag as much as they wanted to after we left Seattle," said a train guard, "and when they found that they could do it without causing anybody trouble, they quit and have been quiet ever since.

"Before we reached the State of Mon-

Train Wreck in France Due to a German Plot

PARIS, Feb. 9.—A dozen American soldiers were injured, eight of them seriously, in a collision yesterday of a troop train with a loose locomotive on the Bordeaux troop line. The seriously injured men were taken to a hospital in Valence.

The Eastern Railway management has announced that in the débris of the wreck near the Auteuil tunnel, in which a coach recently handed over by the Germans broke into flames, a clockwork mechanism was found which, in the language of the statement, "appeared to give an explanation of the accident."

SEATTLE CARS RUN; STRIKE NEAR END

Labor Leaders Themselves Predict It Will Be Called Off in 24 Hours.

UNIONS FALLING AWAY

Newspapers Reappear—Mayor Declares That Decent Workers Have Quit I. W. W.

SEATTLE, Wash., Feb. 9.—The street cars of this city moved today on almost normal schedule, and the general sympathy strike, regarded here as an attempt at Bolshevism, is believed to be near its end.

"The general strike has failed," Mayor Ole Hanson said today. "This means a split between decent labor and the Industrial Workers of the World.

"Seattle, a loyal city has responded nobly in this emergency. The revolution has failed. The attempt to establish a Soviet Government and control and operate all enterprises and industries has collapsed. The Government should arrest, try, and punish all leaders in this conspiracy. No skim milk policy should be adopted. The city authorities have quelled this rebellion. It is now the Government's duty to punish. The whitewash brush must not be used."

Conservative labor leaders asserted tonight that when the General Strike Conference Committee of union delegates reassembles tomorrow morning they would renew the fight to have the sympathetic strike called off and a definite time fixed for its expiration. They were said to believe the strike would come to an end within twenty-four hours.

Voting independently the street car employes' union severed connection with the revolutionary element at 4:30 o'clock this morning.

Dock Men to Resume Work.

The Waterfront Employers' Association decided today to resume activities on an open shop basis unless the union men returned to work tomorrow. Meetings were being held tonight by the longshoremen's and musicians' unions, who are expected to vote on whether or not they would stay out longer on the sympathetic strike.

The next meeting of the General Strike Committee was set for 9:30 A. M. tomorrow.

Several of the theatres were prepared to open today, but refrained from doing so at the request of employes that the theatrical federation have an opportunity to take a final vote on quitting the general strike. There was every indication the theatres would open tomorrow.

Although the union labor newspaper announced the vote of the General Strike Committee early today to continue the sympathy strike was unanimous, it was learned from delegates at the meeting that a lively discussion was indulged in by members who deemed it wise to call off the strike. It was not until after more radical elements gained the upper hand and a crowd of strikers outside the doors and on the stairs shouted disapproval of any action to end the walkout, that the General Strike Committee finally voted to continue the strike. It was stated unofficially that the vote was not unanimous, but was 76 against and 14 for the motion to go back to work.

Piez Under Attack.

Delegates said that animosity toward Director General Charles Piez of the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation was expressed freely during the meeting, and that he was blamed by radical speakers for much of the controversy that brought about the original strike of the shipyard metal trades workers and which led to the sympathetic strike.

One report from the general strike meeting was to the effect that the resolution to declare off the strike was defeated because it was feared a number of the weaker unions would not be able to have men reinstated in their former jobs who had walked out.

All schools in Seattle are to open tomorrow, engineers and janitors having voted yesterday to return to work. The majority of the barber shops also will open regardless of whether the men resume their chairs or not.

All Sunday morning papers appeared as usual today. There was no interference, although the plants were strongly guarded inside and outside with special officers.

Most restaurants had not opened today, being unable to obtain supplies.

City officials declared that Seattle would operate its industries without union men and, if necessary, would advertise in the East and pay the fares of men to take the places of those who are out.

"The first man to apply is the one who gets the job" is the agreed dictum of employers, and it is believed that one by one the crafts will return to work. Even now the Seattle public is put to little inconvenience by the strike.

Mayor Hanson and the Citizen's Committee insist that the strike is an attempt at the overthrow of Government and is the foundation of Bolshevism and Russian Soviet rule. On the part of the city authorities and the business men generally, there is no weakening in the determination not to compromise with the leaders of the movement. The sen-

NATION HONORS THE LIFE WORK OF COL. ROOSEVELT

Countless Assemblages Hear Him Praised as a Sterling American.

GLOWING SPEECH BY HUGHES

"Our Greatest Hero of the War," He Says at Republican Club.

GEN. WOOD WRITES EULOGY

Senator Lodge Overcome in Address at Services Held by Congress.

Hundreds of thousands of men and women in New York and millions throughout the country attended services yesterday in honor of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, at which eulogies were delivered by hundreds who had been his close associates in politics, war, literature, exploration, natural science, social reform, big game hunting, and other branches of human activity with which his name is inseparably linked.

His favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," was sung in nearly every church of the city, and from practically every pulpit his great career was eulogized. Draped with American flags his picture hung in churches, clubrooms, halls, Y. M. C. A. buildings, centres of the War Camp Community Service, schools, and public buildings where his character and deeds were celebrated.

Memorial services were held by Congress in the Chamber of the House in the presence of a distinguished gathering. Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, who was an intimate friend of Colonel Roosevelt, was the only speaker. He eulogized Colonel Roosevelt in an address notable for eloquence. Roosevelt memorial services were held as well in London and Paris and by the American Army of Occupation.

At the end of his eulogy in the House Senator Lodge's voice faltered as he told of the late President's last hours in the home so dear to him, and the Senator was obliged to steady himself as he sank into his chair.

Libraries could be filled with the personal reminiscences of Colonel Roosevelt which were told yesterday by men and women who had been closely associated with him and were moved by profound personal affection for him. The thousands in every walk of life who could speak of the former President from vivid personal contact gave the tribute a character which has probably never marked national ceremonies in honor of the memory of any other public man in any country.

Men of national fame, whose eulogies were careful studies of his life and estimates of his work, generally agreed that his greatest service to the nation had been contributed since the European war started in the Summer of 1914, in awakening and pointing the way to the nation; that, his next greatest service had been the quickening of the national conscience to demand clean politics and clean government, and in the rank with these was his contribution to the nation of the example of his high and irreproachable private character.

Tribute by Charles E. Hughes.

Charles Evans Hughes, who made the address at the Republican Club yesterday afternoon, standing by a full-length portrait of Colonel Roosevelt, gave an eloquent and careful analysis of Colonel Roosevelt's career from childhood to his last days, and pronounced his last four and a half years the most useful and valuable of his life.

"He was one of the first," said Mr. Hughes, "to appreciate the significance of the great war and our duty. His soul revolted at the wrongs of Belgium and he poured out the vials of his scorn upon the neutrality which ignored the calls of humanity and sacrificed the self-respect of the American Republic.

"When the Lusitania was sunk, in May, 1915, he demanded action with 'immediate decision and vigor.' 'Centuries have passed,' said he, 'since any war vessel of a civilized power has shown such ruthless brutality toward non-combatants and especially toward women and children.' None of the 'old time pirates' had 'committed murder on so vast a scale.' 'We earn, as a nation,' he cried, 'measureless scorn and contempt if we follow the lead of those who exalt peace above righteousness, if we heed the voices of those feeble folk who bleat to high heaven that there is peace, when there is no peace.

"'For many months our Government has preserved between right and wrong a neutrality which would have excited the tremulous admiration of Pontius Pilate—the arch-typical neutral of all times.'

"Theodore Roosevelt, to his lasting honor be it said, was right, and had his voice prevailed and had the country earlier shaken off its lethargy, millions of lives and countless treasure might have been spared. Better late than never, but it is costly to be late.

"Of inestimable value to his country had been his service in office, but now—a private citizen—he was to perform an even greater service. To a hesitant administration, and to a people lulled into a false security and lending ear to an unworthy pacificism, he preached the gospel of preparedness. French Censorship Deletes Item on Our Berlin Mission.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The censorship was applied to Le Temps in today's edition. The newspaper publishes a paragraph under the caption "American Investigation at Berlin," saying that the American commission, which has arrived in that city, occupies the building of the American Embassy, which has hitherto been intrusted to the Spanish Embassy.

The three lines which followed this announcement were suppressed by the censorship.

START AT WEIMAR TO ASSUME POWER

Provisional Constitution for Germany Passes First Reading by Acclamation.

TO CHOOSE PRESIDENT SOON

Soviet Congress Summoned for Feb. 20 by Gathering of Soldiers' Councils.

WEIMAR, Feb. 8, (Associated Press.)—The German National Assembly today passed the first reading of the provisional constitution by acclamation. The second and third readings are set for Monday, to which the session was adjourned.

The main portion of the Assembly's time today was devoted to a speech by Hugo Preuss, the Secretary of the Interior, who had been engaged in drafting the constitution. The Minister explained the character of the provisions of the instrument, from which the Assembly is to derive its powers as a law-making body.

The provisional constitution empowers the Assembly to adopt a permanent constitution and to enact "such national laws as are urgently necessary." It provides for the choosing of a national President by a majority vote, and for the creation of a "committee of State," which shall occupy the position of a quasi-second chamber.

The instrument makes no attempt to anticipate or limit the future permanent constitution, except as to one vital detail. This is a provision that the territory of the German States shall not be altered without their consent, which is obviously the Government's method of meeting the opposition evoked by the earlier reports that a division of Prussia was contemplated.

Efforts will be made to include in the document a paragraph definitely forbidding the separation of Church and State. This plan is supported by the Centrists.

Expect Transfer to Berlin.

Sentiment is fairly crystallized after various party caucuses in favor of transferring the National Assembly to Berlin after the Easter holiday. It is probable that there will be an adjournment on April 11, after which the President will call upon the Assembly to reconvene at Berlin.

The Independent Socialists favor an immediate transfer, but stand alone in this demand.

Members of all parties, except the Majority Socialists, express disappointment over Premier Ebert's opening address, which is considered weak and inadequate and which has evidently lowered Herr Ebert's stock very greatly.

BASEL, Feb. 9.—The German Majority Socialists, the German Democrats and the Centrists have reached a complete understanding on the question of participation in the new government, according to the Berlin Lokal-Anzeiger.

Soviet Congress Called for Feb. 20.

BERLIN, Feb. 7, (Associated Press.)—The Congress of Soldiers' Councils attached to various German army corps concluded its sessions here today with the adoption of a resolution calling upon the Central Council of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils to summon a general congress of all the German Soviets by Feb. 20.

If the Central Council of twenty-seven members refuses to comply, the Executive Committee of the Berlin local council is given the authority to summon such a national congress. As the Berlin organization is wholly dominated by radical elements, it is expected that it will lose no time in making use of the opportunity, especially as the Central Council of twenty-seven has already returned its mandate to the National Assembly at Weimar, on the principle that its functions will cease with the installation of the new coalition democratic Government.

There seems to be no doubt that the Workmen's Councils all over Germany are in full accord with the action of the soldiers, and thus the prospective fight of the Soviets for the retention of their authority undiminished promises to supply a lively counteraction to that of the Constituent Assembly.

The concluding session of the Soldiers' Congress was marked by further sharp criticism of the military policies of the Government and of its present attitude toward the Soviets.

One Hamburg soldier delegate said that 40,000 workingmen in Hamburg were under arms, and that if the Gerstenberg Division, now occupying Bremen, attempted to enter Hamburg the first shot fired would be a signal for the blowing up of bridges and of food cargo vessels. The workingmen, he said, were well organised into companies, and the Hamburg Soviet had at its disposal in addition 100,000 troops, within the precincts of he 19th Army Corps.

The congress adopted a resolution declaring that the ordinance of the Minister of War on Jan. 19, affecting the authority of the Soviets, was illegal.

SUFFRAGISTS BURN WILSON IN EFFIGY; MANY LOCKED UP

Police Stop Demonstration Before White House on Eve of Amendment Vote.

VIOLENT SPEECHES MADE

President Denounced for Not Forcing Senate to Favor Votes for Women.

MRS. HAVEMEYER ARRESTED

She and Seven Other New York Women Among Those Refusing to Give Bail.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The militant National Woman's Party had a stormy time today, on the eve of the vote in the Senate on the woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution. President Wilson was burned in effigy in front of the White House, after a demonstration by women who charge that the President is to blame because he has not swayed the recalcitrant Senators to his will and thus assured victory for the cause. At least forty, and according to one report sixty-five, of the suffragists who participated were bundled into patrol wagons, and later, refusing to give bail, were sent to the House of Detention.

The leaders of the militants who were permitted to retain their liberty said late tonight that the police of the First Precinct had refused to tell how many women were held by them or to give out a list of the names. Those known to be in durance, however, include these from New York: Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, who led the New York delegation; Miss Cora Weeks, Miss Wallerstein, Miss Louise Bryant, Miss Edith Ainge, Miss Amy Jungling, Mrs. Palys Chevrier, and Miss Lucy Burns.

The scenes in front of the White House were exciting. An official militant description of the episode contained this paragraph:

"Through the smoke of the flames, from the stone rail of the White House fence and from the steps of the patrols in which they were carried off, the women denounced the President, declaring him to blame for the threatened defeat of the suffrage amendment in the Senate tomorrow."

Effigy About Two Feet High.

The effigy of President Wilson, which looked like a huge doll stuffed with straw and was slightly over two feet in height, was dropped into the flames by Miss Sue White of Nashville, Tenn., Chairman in that State of the National Woman's Party, assisted by Miss Gabriel Harris of Columbia, S. C., State Vice Chairman. There was a good deal of a mixup at the time, as the district police, the military police, and the Boy Scouts, who assisted in the roundup of the women, were getting busy, but, according to the official militant branch statement, Miss White made these remarks before she was pushed into the patrol wagon:

"We burn not the effigy of the President of a free people, but the leader of an autocratic party organization whose tyrannical power holds millions of women in political slavery. I have long been what is known as a 'Southern Democrat,' and the traditions of the democracy of Jefferson and Jackson are still strong in my heart; the stronger because I feel that it is what we are fighting for now.

"Mr. Wilson, as the leader of his party, has forgotten, or else he never knew, the spirit of true democracy. We feel that there is need of a determined protest of this sort; a protest which will shock Mr. Wilson and his followers into putting into action the principle that those who submit to authority shall have a voice in their government."

Mrs. Havemeyer was standing arm in arm with a policeman. She was headed for the patrol wagon, but refused to go until she had said:

"Every Anglo-Saxon Government in the world has enfranchised its women. In Russia, in Hungary, in Austria, in Germany, itself, the women are completely enfranchised, and thirty-four are now sitting in the new Reichstag. We women of America are assembled here today to voice our deep indignation that, while such efforts are being made to establish democracy for Europe, American women are still deprived of a voice in their Government here at home."

Parade by 75 Suffragists.

This little uprising was preceded by a parade from headquarters in Jackson Place, in which, to quote the official statement, "seventy-five women, flaunting the purple, white and gold banners of the Woman's Party, marched, led by Miss Edith Ainge of Jamestown, N. Y., carrying the American flag and Miss Ella Riegel of Bryn Mawr, carrying the first suffrage banner. The urn of fire was carried by Miss Nell Mercer of Buell, Va., and Miss Elizabeth McShane of Uniontown, Penn."

One of the banners bore this inscription: "The President is responsible for the betrayal of American women." Another: "He preaches democracy abroad and thwarts democracy here."

The vote will be taken in the Senate tomorrow afternoon upon motion of Senator Jones of New Mexico, and the prospects are that the resolution will be defeated by a single vote. The wo-

British and American Delegates Back His Project for Importations to Germany.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—President Wilson's resolution, approved by the Supreme War Council yesterday, creating a Supreme Economic Council to consider certain matters arising under the armistice and also appointing civilian economic experts to the Armistice Commission, who shall report directly to the new Economic Council, is the direct outgrowth of the American delegates' increasing feeling that there had been too much militarism in the methods of the Allies in the work of ending the war.

This feeling dates back at least to Jan. 17, when civilian representatives of the Allies, the United States, and Germany met at Treves to determine upon the disposition of German merchant shipping. That was the conference which, under the Chairmanship of Edward N. Hurley, took over all the German passenger and freight tonnage, to be used for the transport of food to Europe and to carry home American and Australian soldiers.

But the relevant point now is that the Treves conference was held entirely under the auspices of Marshal Foch, who dictated every detail as to the time, place of meeting, and the exact number of hours the delegations should be allowed to remain together. The main purposes of the conferences were accomplished, but there was a feeling at the time on the part of the civilians present that they could have accomplished still more if, figuratively speaking, there had not been a man with a sword standing at the door of the conference chamber to insist that they adjourn at a certain minute.

This feature of the Treves conference, not hitherto disclosed, may be taken as a sample of various incidents which led up to a determination on the part of some delegates to the Peace Conference and in the Supreme War Council to substitute civilian for military methods whenever they think such a substitution will add to progress in the work of adjusting things with Germany.

Although there is nothing of the sort in the official communiqué, there is a report that the French members of the Supreme War Council did not give their approval to this apparent curtailing of the supreme power of Marshal Foch in the armistice dealings with Germany without a protest.

Nevertheless, at his weekly Sunday conference with the correspondents today M. Pichon declared himself as satisfied with the new arrangement, and expressed the opinion that it would strengthen Marshal Foch by giving him the advice of civilian experts. But what M. Pichon says of what the French Government thinks of it is not entirely in accord with the expressions of others supposed to voice Government opinion. Perhaps it is another case of France yielding in the preliminaries, as I cabled Thursday, in preparation for her declared intention of being absolutely inflexible when the time comes to determine what sums Germany shall be made to pay in reparation.

In contrast with this apparent hedging as to supreme military power of Foch, great stress is laid on the importance of the Marshal's warning that Germany is not living up to the armistice terms, and that she can put 3,000,000 troops in the field by April 1, whereas the Allies will have only 1,800,000 available at that date if the present rate of demobilization is kept up.

Foch desires no real or apparent diminution of his authority. On the contrary, he wants his power greatly increased, and the armistice terms, when the present period expires on Feb. 17, will be made more rigid by the occupation of Essen, the taking over of more

Haase Warns Allies Against New Hindenburg Army; Fears Junkers Will Use Eastern Force of 600,000

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, Feb. 7.—Before leaving the Socialist congress in Berne to take part in the Weimar National Assembly, Hugo Haase, the German Independent Socialist leader, made some remarkable revelations concerning the great army which Field Marshal von Hindenburg is concentrating in Eastern Germany.

"Under the pretense of defending the Prussian border against the Bolsheviki and the Poles," said Haase, "a volunteer army of 600,000 is being organized by Hindenburg in Pomerania and Eastern Prussia. In reality there is no menace of invasion by the Bolsheviki or the Poles which warrants the concentration of so large a force. Hindenburg's headquarters are at Kolberg, on the Baltic coast, one of the chief strongholds of Junkerism, militarism, and Pan Prussianism."

All over Germany, according to Haase, calls for volunteers to swell this eastern army are posted in public places and published in the newspapers. These posters and advertisements attempt to revive the patriotic and military instincts of the Germans by reminding them of the great deeds of their ancestors, such as their release from Napoleonic rule over 100 years ago.

Thus men are invited to join Lützow's "Wild Jägers" or Köner's "Francs-tireurs Corps" whose legendary exploits are celebrated in German story and song, so that every schoolboy knows that nearly all the corps of Hindenburg's new army bear names recalling the heroes of 1813.

Apart from this appeal to their sentimentality, the volunteers received a promise of 5 marks a day, good food, and new uniforms. Since similarly favorable conditions of existence are scarcely obtainable in civil life today, it is natural that thousands of men should enlist.

After a few skirmishes with the Poles or the Bolsheviki, it is suspected, this new army will be a willing instrument in the hands of the German reactionaries, and at the word of command it may march on Berlin or even against the allied army of occupation. Ebert and Scheidemann are far too dependent on the Prussian military party to protest against the creation of this army, although it may ultimately be directed against them.

"In any case," said Haase, "the associated great powers should watch the movements of Hindenburg's army closely, and, if necessary, should insist upon its strength being limited strictly to the needs of frontier defence. There has been no real revolution in Berlin, although there is disorganization, corruption, and anarchy, but the spirit of militarism is still dominant.

"Prussian officers and Junkers are as arrogant as ever in Berlin. The crowds make way and salute obsequiously when members of the Hohenzollern family pass—members of that family whom Scheidemann does not dare expel because he fears the revelations they may make about his secret relations with the Kaiser's Government during the war."

Clemenceau Sees "Lull in Storm," But Chaotic Russia Still a Peril

Safeguard Against a Possible Resumption of Hostilities by Germany in Wilson's Pledge to France—Praises America's Part in the War —Can't Believe Our Men Regret Fighting in Aid of France.

PARIS, Feb. 9, (Associated Press.)—"While I have said that the war has been won, it would perhaps be more accurate to say that there is a lull in the storm," said Georges Clemenceau, the French Premier, in the course of an interview with The Associated Press today. "At least," he added, "it is as well to face squarely all the possibilities."

Although Germany has been beaten militarily and had been largely disarmed, there still remained, the Premier said, "a chaotic but fruitful Russia, from which great help may be drawn by the Teutons." There would be danger, he thought, if a "reopening of the military debate," if it were not for the assurance President Wilson had voiced recently that whenever France or any other free people was menaced the whole world would be ready to vindicate its liberty.

In the Society of Nations, said the Premier, each nation must be willing to renounce its traditional aloofness and be willing to employ the national strength outside its own country, both in wartime and in peace.

Premier Clemenceau warmly praised the help the American troops had given in winning the war for democracy, and expressed disbelief that there was a man in the American Army of Occupation who regretted that he had "fought on the side of freedom" because he had more creature comforts in Germany than in France.

Knows the American People.

"I lived in the United States in my young and formative days," said the Premier. "Perhaps, therefore, I may be indulged to say a few words to our allies on the other side of the Atlantic. Not by way of advice or propaganda, but frankly as friend to friend.

"The friendship between our peoples which has subsisted for a century and a half is a very beautiful thing. The like of it has never existed for the same length of time between any other two peoples. This cordiality, cemented by our contact during the war, must endure in closer measure hereafter. To this end our minds must meet.

"The entrance of America into the great war was full of dramatic interest. The application of nation-wide conscription without the slightest disturbance, the universal self-denial to supply us with food and all other requirements, the unity of purpose, and the amazing energy of 110,000,000 of people of so varying and complex a character, challenged our admiration and gratitude in such fashion as no one but ourselves can know.

"And the way the American soldiers fought! Nothing could have been finer. Inspired by the holiest ideals, I may say transfigured, they entered upon their task with all the determination, all the fervor, all the spiritual purpose of the old-time Crusaders. They did work! France might have died. She would not have surrendered. But do not mistake me. I do not mean to minimize the importance of the American military aid, nor of the American Red Cross, nor the Salvation Army, nor any of the helpful agencies. There never has been in all the world's history so perfect a co-ordination of the holy purpose of the righteous-minded inhabitants of the earth.

"And now the war is won. The world is made safe for democracy, for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as Jefferson said in the American Declaration of Independence. And the future is before us. What has it in store?

"I am told that some of these gallant American soldiers, who lived in trenches, slept in dugouts, and burrowed in the mud in devastated and war-torn France, when they crossed the Rhine and in an undevastated land found clean beds and baths, rather regret that they fought on the side of freedom and would rather have fought on the side of the murdering Germans. I do not believe it. I am sure there is no American soldier who does not recognize that France, the battlefield of the war, could not give him the comforts that Germany, undevastated, was able to. I do not and will not believe so meanly of a single one of the brilliant warriors who came from the States to our aid in the great struggle for civilization against savagery. It is incredible. It is the tragedy of the war that devastated France could not give them the comforts that unbroken Germany could.

"I believe there is some criticism that there have been overcharges by the French for food and other things. Well, there are things to be said about that. First, for many years the Americans have been coming to Europe and with abundant means and great generosity have been spoiling our people. They have paid for everything with a bounteous hand. As a result, they have taught our people, who were willing pupils, that they were very rich and very, very generous. It was but human that our people should expect much from the Americans.

"It is only fair to say that in every case where the attention of the French Government has been brought to a case of extortion an earnest and, I think, effective, effort has been made to stop it. Compared with the United States France is a small country and limited in her resources. Necessarily she is provident, perhaps unpleasantly careful, I would say; not miserly nor certainly intentionally extortion-artillery, and by compelling Germany to comply with all the terms of the original armistice agreement, which so far she has evaded.

The French people are very largely in sympathy with Foch. They have never for a moment considered the war as over. There is constant dread of its being renewed under conditions that will reverse the victory of last November. Hence their lack of patience with all nonmilitary methods to bring about the desired final result.

Forming a part of the same situation is the conviction in France that Germany is not yet defeated, and that Germany herself is rapidly waking up to the realization of that fact. As the latest pieces of prime evidence of that fact, there is cited the speech of Dr. David, the President of the German National Assembly at Weimar, in which he declared: "The life of Alsace-Lorraine belongs to that of the German nation, and we will never cease to demand that its inhabitants shall have the power of self-determination, according to the Wilson principles."

ECONOMIC ISSUES NOW OCCUPY WILSON

Armistice Views Influenced by Desire to Hasten Return to Normal Conditions.

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The week which remains of President Wilson's visit will be more important in many respects than any similar period since his arrival in Europe. He will return to America with the draft of the Constitution of the League of Nations approved and needing only its inclusion in the formal peace treaty to become effective—that is, of course, if the Senate authorizes the ratification of the treaty. But other matters of considerable moment remain to be disposed of before the President leaves, and everything goes to show that he will have one of the busiest periods in his career before he starts for Brest, where the George Washington is waiting to take him homeward.

While the League of Nations is the President's own particular favorite among several things he has sought to accomplish in the course of his stay in Paris, his interest and that of most of the American official contingent is very deep in the arrangements for the renewal of the armistice terms. Incidental to this extension is the matter of economic conditions in Germany, which Americans regard as of the utmost consequence in the effort to bring the world back to normal.

French Oppose Lenity to Germans.

Their view differs from that of certain other peace representatives, notably the French, whose desire is that Germany receive little if any consideration until her delegates appear at Versailles to sign the peace treaty. Then, according to the French view, the Germans should be informed that the concessions for which they are now importunate will be granted if they accept all the conditions of peace upon which the Interallied Peace Conference has previously agreed. The American view, which is shared wholly or in part by the British, is that something should be done in Germany's behalf. The first thing necessary, in the opinion of the American and British plenipotentiaries, is a modification of the blockade so as to permit the importation into Germany of commodities from Hollaand, including supplies imported into Holland from other countries.

A dispute over this proposal in the Interallied Blockade Commission, of which Vance McCormick is Chairman, caused the commission to lay the case before the Supreme War Council. Out of this situation grew Saturday's action of the War Council in adopting the resolution of President Wilson creating a Supreme Economic Council to consider the nonmilitary matters heretofore adjusted by the permanent Armistice Commission, of which Marshal Foch is President. The Economic Council is virtually superior to the Armistice Commission, whose powers are still further curtailed by adding civilians to its membership, with the right given to report directly to the Supreme Economic Council.

These and other indications show that the President is anxious to take steps before he sails for bringing the world back to its normal state as quickly as possible. It may be said that, while the American representatives appreciate the apprehension in France and elsewhere on the Continent of the danger of a revival of the German menace, they believe that this danger is not acute, and that the best method that the victors can pursue is to get the whole world at work without delay.

During the President's absence these questions will be under consideration by special bodies, and it is expected that much progress will be made toward bringing actual peace while he is in America.

Feb. 8—Bernard Baruch, Vance McCormick, Norman Davis, Oscar S. Straus, and Thomas W. Lamont will be the American members of the new Economic Council.

There is a possibility that the President may remain in Washington only a week or so after Congress adjourns, and may then return to France. His desire for completing the work of the Peace Conference as soon as possible is responsible for this suggestion, which, it is understood, has been considered.

The request of the League of Nations for the United States to become the mandatory for the administration of Constantinople or other enemy territory will not be determined by President Wilson, but will be referred by him to the Senate or possibly the entire Congress.

This course has been decided on, and it is believed will meet the condition that the American people be allowed a chance to express themselves on the question of the United States assuming a share of the responsibility in the management of European affairs.

"CLARIFYING" LEAGUE DRAFT.

Two Sections Under Special Scrutiny —Importance of Economic Council.

PARIS, Feb. 9, (Associated Press.)—The week begins with the business of the Peace Conference well advanced. Dozens of commissions are at work with an energy never seen in former international conferences.

First in interest and importance, because of the fundamental nature of its task, the Commission on the Society of Nations is now awaiting what is termed "clarification" of two sections of the great project which appear to have been adopted without a really clear and unanimous understanding of their scope. While this statement is regarded in some quarters as a rather peculiar confession on the part of trained diplomats, it is cited as justification for the declination by the commission to make public the text of any of the articles it has approved until all the work is completed and beyond the necessity of revision in the light of subsequent action on the other sections. A sub-committee is unraveling the tangled skein of diplomatic verbiage, and it is hoped will clear it up at a meeting tomorrow by the substitution of phraseology that will enable the commission to resume its work very soon.

In view of frequent official assurances that the work was being done with complete unanimity, no doubt can be entertained that the plan will be ready for action by a plenary meeting of the conference before the end of the week. Nearly all the nations are now being represented on the special commission framing it, and from this it is assumed that they have already practically committed their Governments to support of the measure when it comes up for final approval by the conference.

As the American delegates nave explained, the fate of the measure does not depend upon a majority vote. The powers accepting the plan, whatever may be their number, will go ahead with the organization of the society. If there should be dissenters, they will be left out until they find it expedient to come in.

The newly created "Supreme Economic Council" has taken rank next in importance to the Society of Nations Commission. Its complete membership will be announced very soon, and it will get to work immediately thereafter. It will have charge of food supply, shipping, blockade, and possibly financial questions. It has been suggested that this council may become permanent and assume an immense authority, though it probably would be necessary for the Congress of the United States to sanction such function if continued after the signing of a definite peace treaty.

Even if limited in existence to the transitory period between war and peace, the American delegates expect that the Council will be a great aid during the uncertain armistice period in the solution of economic problems for which the military men who have been in control are unfitted by training and tradition, and with which they are unable to cope. The American delegates think it will exercise a wholesome restraining influence over those making excessive demands and will facilitate and hasten an agreement upon the terms for an extension of the armistice, expiring soon.

COMPLETING LEAGUE PLANS.

Larnaude Predicts End of Preliminary Discussions Early This Week.

PARIS, Feb. 8, (Associated Pres.)—"The most important part of the preliminary work of establishing a Society of Nations has been concluded," said Professor Ferdinand Larnaude, dean of the Law Faculty of the University of Paris, and, with Léon Bourgeois, a French delegate on the Commission on a Society of Nations, in discussing the work of the commission yesterday.

"We have reached the fourteenth article," he continued, "and we expect to conclude preliminary discussions early next week. The articles which have been adopted deal with the desire of the society to prevent future wars. What remains to be investigated concerns international transportation, commerce, and financial affairs, and we expect the delegates to agree promptly."

Asked if the departure of President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George, and Premier Orlando would affect the continuance of the commission's work, Professor Larnaude replied:

"No, the work will go on. Colonel House will represent America on the commission, Lord Robert Cecil will appear for Great Britain, and Professor Uhilloga will take the place of Premier Orlando of Italy."

Later in the conversation he said:

"Newspaper men should not give the masses the impression that we will succeed in immediately eradicating the germ of war. This will have to be done gradually. My idea is that when disputes arise between two nations they should be referred to an executive assembly to be formed by the delegates from all States which are members of the Society of Nations. This assembly would, after investigation, decide which of the nations is right, and international forces would, if created, be placed at the disposition of the country in the right, should such a step be necessary. In some cases the Executive Assembly might not act beyond giving a decision and would allow the disputants to settle matters between themselves by force, if so inclined."

Professor Larnaude alluded to the "calm, perfectly natural and agreeable manner" in which President Wilson has presided over the discussions of the commission.

"Had we at times been impatient," he said. "I am sure the dignified attitude of the American President would have been sufficient to quiet us."

Referring to the probable capital of the Society of Nations, he said that he preferred Versailles, but added that this was merely his personal choice, for the reason that Versailles is so close to the great telegraphic, postal, railroad, and diplomatic centre of Paris.

AMERICAN MANIFESTO REBUKES SOCIALISTS

Berne Conference Agitated by Charge of Deception—Hearing Refused to Bohn.

GENEVA, Feb. 9.—The International Socialist Conference at Berne held a session today and a sensation was caused when a manifesto, said to have come from American sources, was under discussion. The manifesto stated that the conference was a deception, as the working class was not really represented.

Frank Bohn, who was described as the "unofficial American delegate," was refused permission to address the conference.

With the arrival of the Irish representatives the delegates now number 123.

BERNE, Feb. 9.—Legislation looking to international protection for the working classes was discussed at a long session of the Socialist Conference last night.

Arthur Henderson, one of the British delegates, declared that the Peace Conference at Paris was now offering an extraordinary opportunity for decisive progress. Heretofore the principal obstacle to the protection of labor had been the economic competition between countries, he said, but now the Peace Conference had the power to remove the obstacle by international agreements with respect to legislation.

The Hungarian Minister of Public Instruction, M. Kanffy, said that the protection of the working classes had only importance so far as the working classes were in possession of the real might, and if the Paris conference abused the victory the working people in the defeated countries would fall into the deepest misery.

The Hungarian people, he asserted, would be in danger of becoming beggars and adventurers, a continual source of disorders similar to those prevailing prior to the war in the Balkan countries. Such disorders would irresistibly flow westward, he said, eventually inundating the victorious countries themselves.

The conference will appoint a commission to negotiate with the Paris Peace Conference.

Ramsey Macdonald of the British delegation yesterday told the International Trade Union Conference, which is also meeting here, that the British Trade Unions favored the autonomy movements for India and Egypt and the Irish home rule movement.

Delegate Tomaso of Argentina urged that the conference provide in its constitution measures which would remedy as far as possible what he characterized as the flagrant inequalities which workmen have to suffer because of the variations in the exchange value of money.

GREEK TRIBUTE TO WILSON.

Olive Wood of Civic Service Incloses His LL.D. Diploma from Athens.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The delegation from the University of Athens which called on President Wilson last night and delivered on behalf of the University a diploma bestowing upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was headed by Professor Andreadis of the Faculty of the University and a member of the American Academy of Political Science.

"May it be allowed us members of the profession from whose ranks you were called to your high office," said Professor Andreadis, in presenting the diploma, "to add this wish: The box which contains this diploma came from one of those ancient olive trees of which Sophocles sang. The olive tree has always been a symbol of peace. In the olden days its branches were prizes for the peaceful victors of the Olympic Games. May a similar wreath of olive, Mr. President, crown the work you have undertaken in the interest of humanity."

President Wilson, in accepting the diploma, asserted his belief in the value of classical studies. He alluded to the conferences he had had with Premier Venizelos and remarked that the ideals of Greece, the oldest nation in Europe, were very like the ideals of America and the New World. Although these ideals and theories were derided by some men, he added, the fact was that the ideals of the Entente had enabled it to overcome the might of Germany.

ate. But also you must know that all the time our own French people have paid the same prices for what they bought that our American friends have.

"Throughout the war our relations with the American Army have been most cordial, and your Treasury officials will assure you, I am sure, that there has always been a spirit of generosity on both sides. Any suggestion that we have asked payment for trenches or the burial places of your brave soldiers is atrocious. For all future ages the graves of American soldiers will be in the tender and sacred keeping of our grateful people.

"I have said that the war is won. It would perhaps be more accurate to say that there is a lull in the storm. At least it is as well to face squarely all of the possibilities.

Meant to Exterminate France.

"Recent disclosures have enabled us to look deeper into the purposes of the enemy than we could heretofore. It was not purely a dream of military domination on the part of Prussia. It was a definite, calculated conspiracy to exterminate France, as well industrially and commercially as in a military sense. In this effort the German bankers and manufacturers joined their General Staff. The exposures of Dr. Mühlon of the Krupp Works and of Kurt Eisner at the Berne Socialist Conference make this clear.

"And this fact explains many of the activities of the German Army which we were not able to understand. We can now see why they stole the machinery from our factories, why they destroyed the coal mines of Lens, why there was all the wanton devastation of French territory, even when they were in retreat. It was thought to be a part of their tactics of military frightfulness. Instead, we can see now that it was a part of their deliberate commercial design.

"And in this phase of their warmaking effort they have not been altogether unsuccessful. The industrial life of France has been so wrecked that its resuscitation is most difficult, while by reason of her military surrender Germany has been able to save her factories, intact and ready for immediate efficient operation. Industrially and commercially, as between France and Prussia, for the present the victory is with the Hun.

"And financially, by reason of the blockade, (the value of which as a military factor no one will question,) the German war debt is almost wholly a debt to her own people, easily repudiated, while the debt of France is one which must be paid. Here again the war has proved something like a Pyrrhic victory for France.

"The French fortune invested abroad before the war was large—some fifty or sixty billions (francs) of French stock. What has become of that fortune? The best that we can hope for is that payments on about two-thirds of it may be considered as simply deferred; that the immense sum accumulated by French thrift and loaned abroad will be collectible eventually.

Big Investment in Russia.

"France has something like twenty billion francs invested in Russia, two-thirds of that sum in Russian Government securities and the remainder in industrial enterprises. The French people have other billions in Balkan and Turkish obligations. Then, just before the war, the disorders in Mexico deprived us of any revenue from about two and a half billions of francs invested there, and we are having the same experience with several other billions in South America, notably the immense French investments in railways.

"I mention some of these financial details to show how the French fortune has shrunk, so that our people can no longer derive a large income from abroad. The paying investments abroad are relatively inconsiderable compared to the debts that France has contracted abroad during the war, particularly in America and in England. The French Government has also loaned considerable sums to her small allies, just as America has done with her associates.

"We look forward, therefore, to an immediate future in which we must regularly meet great interest charges in America and elsewhere abroad, to provide which we will have only the resources at home.

"If our national debts were due only to our own people the problem would not be so difficult, because we would not then have to consider the sending out of the country of great sums at disadvantageous rates of exchange. The money collected from the French people for interest on the national loans would be distributed among the French people, unequally perhaps, but nevertheless the interest payments would remain in the country, to be used partly for reconstruction and as capital for the development of our industrial life.

"Even as to the military triumphs over Germany there is a situation not altogether without disquieting features for France. It is quite true that the Allies have taken the German Navy, and in large measure have disarmed the enemy. But there remains a chaotic yet fruitful Russia from which great help may be drawn by the Teutons.

"With the British Army demobilized, the American Army back home, and France isolated, there might be a danger of a reopening of the military debate by Germany which might embarrass us were it not for the assurance which President Wilson gave us in the Chamber of Deputies the other day that under the operation of the League of Nations, 'whenever France or any other free people is threatened the whole world will be ready to vindicate its liberty,' so that 'there never shall be any doubt or waiting or surmise.' This has given us great solace. And so we bid the departing American soldiers godspeed and a happy return to their peaceful firesides.

All Based on Wilson's Promise.

"Of course, a Society of Nations in which America and France enter must be supported profoundly by the conviction of their peoples and by a determination of each nation entering into the agreement to be willing to renounce its traditional aloofness from other peoples and willing to employ the national strength outside its own country, in time of peace as well as under the pressure of war.

"We shall have problems, but France will face them, as she has done, with courage and with an abiding faith in the triumph of right and justice. As was said of Chevalier Bayard, so must it be said of France—she will continue 'sans peur et sans reproche.'

"All of our plans are based upon the splendid platform laid down by President Wilson. In perfect harmony with the principles which he has enunciated, we are striving for higher and holier idealism in the conduct of the affairs of the world. Divested of all mercenary aspirations, we join heartily and unreservedly in the effort to make a better world and one of simple justice to all mankind."

SOLDIERS OVERSEAS FEAR LOSS OF GOLD V

Hear Congress Is Preparing to Abolish the Use of Service Chevrons.

NEWS STIRS INDIGNATION

House Committee to Recommend That All Troops Wear Same Service Insignia.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Feb. 9.—Yesterday afternoon a military wireless was picked up with the news that the pending Army Appropriation bill carries a clause abolishing the service chevron, and this morning this news was on the army corps, division, regimental, and company bulletin boards.

It is impossible to exaggerate the wave of indignation and resentment which is sweeping through the ranks of the American fighters. For nine out of every ten the service stripe is what they have to show that they were in the big war. Some few have medals, others have wounds, but to the great majority their gold V on the left forearm is their most precious possession. As the months have passed each soldier has looked forward to the day when he could have one more service stripe. And with what pride he tacked it on his sleeve! It is his badge of honor, and he who wears three is envied by the lad who has but two, and the soldier who has but one longs for the second.

Regarded as Their Reward.

The last who came into the fray feel some satisfaction at waiting for their passage back because that day will give them a service stripe. That service stripe means something to our fighting doughboys. They regard it as their reward for having won the war.

The wireless dispatch said the clause was put in the bill because it was thought that to allow the men who did the fighting to wear the service chevrons would be a discrimination against those who served at home.

I am not going into that argument. I am telling what the soldiers here are saying today. They are saying they distrust that reason. They are asking what became of the silver service chevrons the army men who did not come to Europe were to wear. They are angry about the thing, and there's no denying it.

They are using strong language. They are charging it to politics. They remark sarcastically that there are more votes among the soldiers who didn't come over than among those who did. They recall having read that more officers remained at home than came to France.

Now They'll Never Take It Off.

I hear them say that no matter what Congress does they will never take off their service stripes until they take off the uniform. They are proud of their service stripes and they mean to keep them. The soldiers hereabouts say they feel sorry for their comrades who didn't get a chance to fight. They say that they had friends who didn't get over who could have done as well as they. But they say that does not alter the fact that they are the lads who fought, therefore, they are lads entitled to be recognized as those who fought.

They point out that the French and British and Belgians have their service stripes. They are asking why Congressmen should not be willing for them to be pointed out as the lads who met the Hun in combat and beat him.

What About the Maimed?

They are asking, if Congress would make them hide the fact that they have been overseas, what Congress will do about the doughboys who lost a leg in the Argonne. How can the evidence of his fighting be hid? They ask how about the boy who lost an arm at Château-Thierry. They ask if he will be forbidden to go on the street for fear it will be learned that he was in the fight.

They are asking if those who have the Distinguished Service Cross, won only in combat, will have them stripped from their breasts because the piece of metal shows its wearer fought the boche. They are asking these and many more questions along the Rhine today. They are asking if the homecoming parades up Main Street may be banned because they might be discriminating against the fighters who didn't get a chance.

Perhaps these fighting soldiers of ours overestimate the importance of the little stripes of braid they had counted on to show their part in the big war. But whether they do or whether they don't, there isn't one of them who would not rather lose any earthly possession he has than the light gold V, or maybe two, or sometimes three, he wears upon the left sleeve of his khaki uniform.

Silver Stripe Caused Protest.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The Army Appropriation bill will be reported in the House tomorrow afternoon or Tuesday morning, with a provision forbidding the making of any distinction in the kind of chevrons, or other insignia worn by men in the United States Army. The text of this provision has not been drafted, but Chairman Dent of the committee was instructed by the committee to frame such a provision and expects to have its language drafted tomorrow.

If this amendment is finally approved by the committee and passes muster in Congress it will wipe out the present distinction between soldiers in this country who wear silver service chevrons for each six months of service and soldiers on overseas duty who wear gold service chevrons for each six months of duty. The committee has received many protests against the use of silver chevrons as used to mark the service of men who have not gone overseas, and there is strong sentiment in the committee against having any distinction made between men who went abroad and those who stayed at home so far as service insignia is concerned. For that reason Chairman Dent was instructed to draft a provision to prohibit any distinction being made.

Such an amendment, however, would be subject to a point of order in the House that it would be "new legislation" on an appropriation bill.

SUMMONS AMERICA TO EUROPEAN DUTIES

London Observer Says She Must Choose Selfish Aloofness or Altruistic Service.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Asserting that America is faced now with "the choice of Achilles," The Observer makes a strong appeal to her to take her full share in the work of the League of Nations, even if it involves intervention in European affairs. It says Germany is straining every nerve to prevent her complete co-operation with her European allies by trying to rouse her distrust of England.

"The German cry is still the same: 'England's selfishness, England's lust of domination.' Why? Because the Germans know that if they can once divide the English-speaking countries there is still hope that German ambitions, which have by no means died with the downfall of Kaiserism, may be realized.

"We have given such proofs as no other power has given of our sincerity and earnestness in forwarding the League of Nations idea. We have risked the discontent of Britons overseas. We have shown our willingness to pool what our arms have won in the interest of the world's peace and security. We don no halo of saintship on that account, but we appeal to all that is noble and worthy in the American character to stand by us to the uttermost in bringing to full effect the design which has chiefly emanated from the brain and conscience of the President of the United States."

The Observer goes on to say it knows that the brilliant prospect of material gain looms before the American people if they make the "great refusal."

"They are far less strained by the war than any of the other great nations of the world except Japan. They can apply their vast resources to building up a prosperity and leadership in the world's commerce which has never been approached by any nation in history. They have an immense army trained, and, as regards a large part of it, inured to war. So far as shipbuilding and armaments go, they can create a fleet which even Britain could not match.

"To some Americans it may seem that the world lies at their feet if they refrain from involving themselves too deeply in international concerns; but the picture is a mirage. America is great by reason of her greatness of soul, by force of ideas, and not by reason of material wealth or power. If she loses her pride of place in the world of ideas she loses all that makes of her people a nation, and the time has come, in the overthrow of the political systems of two-thirds of the civilized world, when the value of ideas is to be found only in their application."

So The Observer hopes the President, on his return home, will make America see that the Monroe Doctrine must be extended to embrace the whole world, and that she must do her full part to enforce it.

TEUTON INTRIGUERS BUSY AT THE HAGUE

Kuehlmann's Mission Reported to be in Connection with Colonies' Future.

AIM TO DIVIDE THE ALLIES

Hungary and the Ukraine Also Have Emissaries at the Dutch Capital.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Feb. 8.—After two months' of comparative calm, The Hague has again become a veritable hotbed of intrigue. It is crowded with delegates, Government emissaries and commissions of various countries, especially enemy countries and would-be countries, striving to get in touch with allied official circles in the hope of getting a hearing at the Paris Peace Conference.

Not least important of these visitors at present is Dr. von Kühlmann, former German Foreign Minister, who up to the present time has refused to see any press representatives. THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns that von Kühlmann, who has many old friends in Holland dating from his diplomatic intermezzo, has come to The Hague on a private mission which rumor says is connected with the question of colonies.

One of the latest diplomatic commissions is from the Ukraine. Hungary also has a Government emissary in Dr. Imberg, who was headquarters press censor during the war and is now here on work connected with the question of self determination of nations.

There is no doubt that the prospect of the disposal of the German colonies has awakened a storm of indignation and disappointment in Germany and the question was one of the first to be discussed by the Weimar National Assembly. From all over the country comes news of protests from Chambers of Commerce, Colonial Leagues, etc.

Herr Rebiich, in the Vossische Zeitung, follows the cue of Foreign Minister von Brockdorff-Rantzau, who has tried the old time German diplomatic game of playing off one opponent against another, thereby arousing jealousy. The paper says that two groups have been formed at the Paris Conference. On one side, it asserts, are America and England, while on the other side are the European Continental Powers and Japan, both groups being unfavorable to Germany. It remarks that Rantzau lacks logic for his argument.

Recognition of a world league as the highest power and control, the paper says, must depend on the character of the league, but that league under which England and America wish to place the former German colonies is not one which Germany is striving for and the colonies would be practically delivered over to those two powers.

"The neutralizing of the South Sea Islands and their delivery to the league," the paper proceeds, "would be to America's interest. The grouping here involved is easily recognized by the fact that Japan sharply opposes the Anglo-American project. The fight for the control of the South Sea Islands is a struggle for supremacy in the Pacific."

The paper says that if the "Anglo-American League" succeeds, then colonial products, especially all tropical raw materials, will be under the entire control of these two powers, which can arbitrarily grant or refuse them. France must understand, it asserts, that this is only a provisional arrangement, as otherwise it would be a danger not only to Germany but to the Continental Powers.

READY TO RESUME TRADE WITH GERMANY

American and Japanese Business Men Said to be Preparing in Holland.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Feb. [illegible]—The Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant publishes a long article on the Netherlands overseas trust, criticizing the maintenance of commercial restrictions and the blacklist by the associated Governments. This cannot exist much longer, the paper says, as pressure for more commercial freedom is noticeable in the allied countries, especially America and Japan.

The paper argues that as soon as one allied country commences unrestricted trading others will have to follow in order to compete and not lose their place in the world market. Already several American and Japanese who are important business men in their respective countries, the paper continues, are putting out feelers in order to form new connections in Holland and thus come into touch with the commercial world of the central powers. The paper argues that this attitude will force other powers who imbibed ideas of boycotting the central powers to modify their tactics.

"Should America and Japan have an advantage as regards future commerce communication with the central powers then England will be obliged to change her policy in her own interests," it concluded.

An influential financier, speaking to The New York Times correspondent, also arrested that several influential American and Japanese business men were in Holland especially for the formation of relations with Dutch banks and to be ready for commerce when peace comes.

"Germany," he said, "needs fresh capital worse than anything else, and America is the country to supply it. Americans are clever and mean to have a group prepared ready to spring in as soon as peace is signed, but Japan will be an active competitor."

The Weser Zeitung says many Germans are too depressed at the outcome of the war to believe that there is anything more to hope for from abroad. This depression, it argues, is exaggerated. In Japan German prestige and influence are increasing and more German is taught and spoken than ever before, especially among the bourgeois classes, who intend to become merchants, and a German missionary writes that he never had so many Japanese pupils. The paper pretends that German influence is equally puissant in China.

According to The Maasbode, negotiations are about to be opened between delegates of German industry and the Netherlands Government for export of iron to Germany.

GENEVA, Feb. 9, (Associated Press.)—The economic invasion of Switzerland by the Central Powers, who through this portal hope to reopen their former commercial relations with the Allies, continues on a large scale.

The New Zurich Gazette says that from the first of May to the end of July, 1918, 203 new foreign industrial and commercial enterprises were founded in Zurich alone, while during the first half of the same year the number of foreign firms in Zurich, the majority of them German, Austrian, and Hungarian, amounted to 387. There were no English or American firms, and only five French.

It is easy for the Austro-Germans to evade the Swiss commercial laws by choosing dummies from among their 300,000 compatriots residing in Switzerland before the war as heads of the firms. The German newspapers continue to publish advertisements seeking orders for allied countries through Switzerland.

STRICTER ARMISTICE RULES?

War Council Expected to Adopt Them at Today's Meeting.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The Supreme War Council is reported to have reached a decision at yesterday's meeting that it was necessary to impose more severe conditions upon Germany for the renewal of the armistice, because of her attitude toward the fulfillment of her obligations. Decisions are also said to have been reached for the control of German demobilization and of the production of plants formerly engaged in producing war material.

It is expected that the means for securing the execution of the conditions laid down will be reached at Monday's session of the Council.

OUTLINES JAPAN'S IDEALS OF PEACE

Baron Makino, Spokesman in Paris, Pleads His Country's Right to Expansion.

ISOLATED IN THE EAST

Takes No Morbid View of Her Situation, but is Mindful of Her Dignity.

LOOKS TO CHINA FOR OUTLET

Her Ambitions Mutually Beneficial—"Resolved to Work with Her Allies."

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—The members of the Japanese delegation in the Peace Conference have so far taken little part in the discussions and there has been much speculation regarding their aims. Baron Makino, acting head of the delegation, today gave me for THE NEW YORK TIMES a statement of the general attitude of his country.

"All Japan," he said, "is geographically isolated from the rest of the civilized world, remote from the continents of Europe and America, but her sympathies are entirely with the cause of humanity and civilization for which the Allies have been fighting. Japan has many and difficult problems before her that await solution—problems which in some instances are more complicated than those which any of the Allies is called on to solve.

"For instance, Japan has a large and rapidly growing population—70,000,000 people, who are increasing at the rate of more than half a million every year—against which she has a small island territory. And her people are spirited, energetic, and progressive, possessing in a high degree constructive and organizing abilities and eager to use all her moral and material resources in performing such duties as are devolved upon them by their peculiar position and circumstances.

"When, however, in obedience to these progressive impulses, they turn their attention overseas they seem to find the door closed against them everywhere—east, west, south, and north. But they have not so far allowed themselves to take a morbid view of the situation, nor will they in the future. They have imagination and understanding enough to take a sympathetic view of the attitude of their friendly neighbors, although at the same time they are not unmindful of the maintenance of the dignity and pride proper to the people of a world power.

Japan's Ambitions in China.

With these limitations imposed upon her, Japan has naturally turned toward China as an outlet for her necessary expansion, where, on account of the conditions prevailing, her activities are bound to be no less beneficial to native interests than to her own. She has always maintained this standard of mutuality, believing that one could not permanently enjoy without conferring benefit. Japan knows that self-centred egotism is not the best policy, and that in the nature of things her welfare and prosperity are bound up with those of her great neighbor, whose enormous resources await development.

"When Japan was called upon to make her decision between the two combatants in the war she could have obtained from Germany any conditions she might have cared to impose. But she unhesitatingly threw in her lot with the Allies. Japan chose the path of duty, righteousness, and humanity, and of loyalty to treaty and helpfulness to friends in need rather than the path of mercenary calculation.

Says Japanese Are Idealists.

"We are not a trading people. We are far less worldly-wise than we are supposed to be by some people. On the contrary, we are on the visionary side. Our people are idealists. It is broader considerations which appeal to them. There was never a temptation to treat with the forces which stood for gain and spoils, regardless of right. Every instinct in us drew us to the side of the Entente. There never was a moment when we regretted our decision, and never a time when we were not loyal to the core, far removed from the centre of the conflict as we were.

"Therefore, trusting in the just and upright decisions of the conference, we shall never regret our decision of 1914. We were fighting for ourselves in the sense that we were fighting for our own principles, our own convictions, against the brutality of force. We could not have done otherwise. Japan may, indeed, be ambitious, but hers is an ambition of right thinking and right doing, of advancing and expanding along the lines of civilization and high moral principles. She believes that the great forces—the ultimately dominating forces—are the moral forces. In any and all circumstances she will shape her effort for national greatness along the lines of higher civilization. She is resolved to walk and work shoulder to shoulder with her Allies of the Occident and to give her fullest aid for the advancement of the world."

POLAND'S PRESIDENT MAY BE PADEREWSKI

His Election by National Assembly Expected—Pilsudski Slated for Ministry.

WARSAW, Feb. 9, (Associated Press.)—With the meeting of New Poland's first Constitutional Assembly today at the Marius Institute, the work of creating a permanent Government will be well under way. It is expected that after the first gathering, with the picturesque features furnished by many members wearing the garb of ancient Poland, the Assembly will quickly get down to business, adopt the constitution, which has already been, for the greater part, drafted, and elect a President of the Republic, who will probably be Ignace Jan Paderewski. General Joseph Pilsudski is slated for a prominent post in the new Ministry which is to be formed.

The majority of the members of the Assembly comprises National Democrats and representatives of the Peasant Party, with the Jewish representatives and the Socialists in the minority. There will be about 200 members for the present, including delegates from the provinces where it was impossible to hold elections. The National Democrats claim 91 members, the Polish Peasants 51, the Peasants' Union 19, the Socialists 14, the Workmen's Unions 7, the Jewish Party 8, the United Polish Peasants 6, and the German Colonists 2.

One of the big questions to come up is the division of the land. It is expected that any one person will be limited to the holding of 1,000 acres, but proper payment is to be made whenever big properties are sub-divided. It seems improbable, however, that action along this line will be taken immediately, as all the parties fear to precipitate worse financial conditions by hurried action. Representatives of the propertied classes, among which the peasants are largely represented, declare they were frightened by the taste of Socialistic Government they obtained in November and December last.

One of the moves planned is the prevention of the emigration of peasants to America, the desire being to encourage them to remain at home, and also to induce those in America to return and work the land.

The great part which the women seem likely to take in the future of Poland was emphasized in the election, which went strongly Conservative with the help of their votes. They elected to the Assembly Mme. Barlicka, head of the Teachers' Institute, and they were also strong in support of the Paderewski ticket.

LICHNOWSKY PLAINT DERIDED BY POLE

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—John F. Smulski, Polish Commissioner in the United States, tonight issued a statement in reply to Prince Lichnowsky's authorized interview of protest against the inclusion of Prussian Poland and the port of Danzig in the new Polish State, which has just been recognized by President Wilson. Commissioner Smulski asserts that Prince Lichnowsky's interview is part of a German propagandist move and adds that he, Smulski, was warned less than a month ago by the Polish authorities in Paris and by Paderewski that a "new German propaganda drive aiming at upsetting the confidence of the American people in a United Polish State was under way."

"The German princeling," said Mr. Smulski, "has not only insulted the Polish people by intimating that they are incapable of self-government, but has reflected on the judgment of President Wilson and his advisers, who less than ten days ago recognized the new Polish State under the Premiership of Mr. Paderewski.

"He has also insulted the American people by attempting to palm on them as original rehashes of German propaganda efforts first printed in the Berliner Tageblatt by Dr. Bernhard Dernburg and in the Preussische Jahrbucker by that well-known lachrymose altruist, Dr. Hans Delbrück.

"In short, Prince Lichnowsy and his German associates, who in Germany have caught a reflection of the feeling of uneasiness in the United States over the possibility that the generous action of the American people in recognizing new States may create complications which will call for the retention of American soldier boys for an indefinite period, have started to capitalize this condition for German ends. They hope to create an anxious disposition to accept any sort of peace conclusion which will allow an easy retreat."

54 FOREIGN REDS TO BE DEPORTED

tana Mr. Jackson went through and told the prisoners that for their own good they had better remain quiet and not allow red stuff to show from the windows.

"'The cowboys of this State don't like I. W. W.'s,' he told them. 'If they see you coming through with a lot of racket and find out who you are, they might let loose with some fireworks. These cowboys are mighty quick on the trigger hereabouts.'

"That was enough. The Bolshevist Army pulled in its banners and faded from sight as we passed through Montana towns."

Avoided Mob at Butte.

The one and only attempt at a mob delivery of the prisoners was frustrated by the foresight of the Federal officers. Before the prison train reached Butte, Mont., officers were warned that I. W. W. leaders in that city and Helena had learned of the deportations and were massing to deliver their comrades. The two cars, then attached to a regular train, were cut off at a junction and put into another train which made a wide detour, missing both Butte and Helena and striking the main line well to the east of the danger point, while the I. W. W. mob spread over Montana in a futile attempt at rescue.

One thousand men in a typical I. W. W. mob stormed the Butte station when the original train reached that point, according to reports received here by the guards. Three hundred members of the mob swept gatemen and police officers aside and insisted on searching the train. They were allowed to do so and left without causing further trouble when they found what had happened up the line.

Throughout the trip railroad men and Federal officers are co-operating to keep the route and running schedule secret. Chief Jackson has no fear of running into any additional trouble on the remainder of his journey. While in Chicago, his fourteen guards were placed in complete command of the train and although Federal officers and railroad men were notified of the movement, the immigration guards did not require assistance of any kind.

Only one woman, the wife of a Finnish agitator arrested in Spokane, was among the prisoners.

Handcuffs for All.

She hugged a car window and gloomily watched the guards as they paced their beats. In a forward compartment a blanket concealed fifty-four pairs of business-like handcuffs to be used in emergencies or when the prisoners leave their cars.

"The handcuffs helped convince these birds that they are not appreciated in America," remarked a stocky little guard who wore a civilian overcoat over his infantry uniform. He received his discharge just in time to serve in the first active campaign of Uncle Sam's war against the reds.

"We don't need the cuffs now," said the guard. "What we need is a number of good gags. This is a musical gang. They sing foreign songs for hours. Some of 'em wake up in the night to do it."

The majority of the prisoners will be sent back to Russian provinces. Some are Norwegians, some Scandinavians, and some Finns, according to their guards.

The five prisoners who were added to the party here are alien convicts who have been sentenced to deportation under the 1917 act for some time past. They are not connected with the I. W. W. or Bolshevist movement, as far as could be learned. One of the Chicago prisoners served a sentence in the House of Correction for failure to register.

Practically all of the prisoners have been in the United States more than a year, according to the Finn leader and spokesman of the party, who has been a Bolshevist representative in every city west of the Mississippi. He led a half-hearted cheer from his barred window yesterday and exhibited the tattered end of a red flag when he was sure no "quick trigger" cowboy lurked in the vicinity.

The immigration service bases its new policy of deportation on the immigration act passed by Congress in October, 1917.

Says the Allies Distrust One Another and the Russians Distrust All of Them.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—The Chicago Tribune this morning publishes the following from its correspondent who has been in North Russia, dated Vard, Norway, Feb. 1, (by cable from Norvik, Feb. 8):

"After two months spent in investigating the conditions in North Russia, where American troops are serving under allied directorship, I can state the following facts:

"First—The North Russia allied expedition has developed into a pitiful failure. It has failed to inspire confidence and loyalty and give real assistance to Russia. It has become a cesspool of jealousy, hatreds, mistakes, and shattered illusions. The different allies distrust one another and the Russians distrust the entire expedition.

"Second—The American troops were put under an absolute imperialistic command, being handled in a way that was against every tradition of the army and country. They were put to doing a King's business and to do whatever task was assigned to them by the British. American men and their ideals of right and fairness were entirely submerged through the un-American leadership.

"Third—The entire expedition suffered from a complete lack of spiritual leadership. Instead of being an ordinary soldier's job, this expedition required sympathetic understanding. It always has been more political than military. The original leaders thought themselves to be great soldiers and great diplomats, but they proved to be neither.

"Fourth—The expedition has lacked spiritual significance. Europe's war tired men, sent here from the French battlefields, failed to appreciate the great revolution or sympathize with the unrest and the new birth that Russia is going through. Most of the allied soldiers, especially since the signing of the armistice, hated the job, despite the Russians, and have no concern with the future of the country. The expedition, lacking this spiritual significance in men's minds, has become a mere fighting job to collect Russia's debt to Europe.

"Fifth—There is no enthusiasm even among the intelligent Russians in the north to assist the Allies and fight the Bolsheviki. Everywhere there is a growing disgust against the expedition, especially against the British.

"Sixth—The beautiful faith of the Russians for America is breaking under the manhandling by our forces under the foreign command. The American forces have been led by an American colonel when they should have had a major general. Within our own forces we lacked the right leadership, permitting the Americans to be placed under the limited control of foreigners.

"I have come out of Russia to write this. The censorship that has crawled back into its hole in most of the world still wears the iron heel of war days in the north. The American public has been fed pretty stories of the gentle glories of this 'help-Russia' expedition, but the facts are that a mess has been stewed and has been kept for the cooks themselves.

"America, whose ideals of honor are at stake and whose sons are being sacrificed, has the right to know the facts. In North Russia the expedition has become a dismal comic opera. Here in the north, in a district that never was violently Bolshevist, where the Allies had many friends at the start, and where, since the first days there have been unlimited opportunities to advance confidence and gain respect, here with everything their own way, the Allies have failed utterly.

"Today, in Archangel, Murmansk, and the other cities of the district, there is growing dissatisfaction against the way the expedition has interfered in local Russian affairs. Every phase of life within the district is controlled by the Allies and dominated by them.

"The Russians frankly resent this. They will tell you openly that they, and not the outsiders, should determine the exact form of government and pick the leaders. Today if a Russian fails to follow the ideas and opinions of the allied leaders he is classed as a Bolshevik, with the possibilities of jail to keep him silent. Only such men as conform with the foreigners' ideas last in the local government.

"The foreign military are actually and undeniably interfering in local affairs. They are dominating every department, forcing their own ideas and judgments against the wishes of the North Russian Provisional Government. Martial law has been established, placing the foreign military above the local authorities. All this reflected against the avowed motives of the Allies.

"'Are the Allies coming in to help Russia or themselves?' the people ask. 'Are they going to force their ideas of government upon us, or merely to help us put down the Moscow Government, so we can have our own fair, elective Government? If that great allied force comes into Russia, would they insist on us accepting their ideas of policies as they have done in Archangel?'

"This is the real test of the whole idea of interventions, and the people of North Russia have the right to ask it. As far as they are able to tell by experience, military intervention means interference with their internal affairs. Practically all of the Russians resent this. They reserve the right to let their political development take its own course.

"It is difficult to understand the question until the facts are grasped that the whole country is seething with unrest. In this land there are a hundred and one pet theories, ideas, and beliefs, all of the adherents striving to put forward their remedies. Then, into this boiling mess, is stuck a bayonet instead of a spoon, and this new outside foreign cook, whose receipts are not wanted, whose ability is questioned, whose sincerity is doubted, shouts 'Try my brand of cooking, you need it. Try it, or I'll stick you with a bayonet.'

"This is exactly what has happened in North Russia. One particular outside nation forced their ideas of life, liberty, happiness, government justice, censorship, and everything, on the Russians and they have been imperialistic, old-fashioned, old-world ideas.

"Recently one of the sincerest Russian Revolutionists in Archangel, who gave years of his life to bring about the original Revolution, said:

"'The thousands of honest anti-Bolshevist radicals throughout Russia are fearing the course that the intervention may take more than they fear the Bolsheviki. We prefer the present Moscow Government to the return of terrible reaction. As far as we can judge certain of the Allies now are working toward breaking the heart of the whole spirit of advancement in Russia and want a heavy handed dictatorship established, so that life and business can go on under the old imperialistic conditions.

"'If the Allies really want to help us, why don't they help us in a straight military way and with food, but let us decide our own political future within ourselves?'

"The American troops are being used by a foreign high command for internal interference. For instance, on Sept. 3, on the night before the American troops landed in Archangel in force, the Provisional Government was kidnapped by certain Russian Militia people and spirited to an island in the White Sea. This bore, without question, the silent approval of certain elements of the Allied High Command, and, in many circles, is said to have been instigated entirely by them.

"The American Ambassador forced the return of this Government, but the workmen of Archangel went on strike as a protest. It was a pure political strike, but the first job the American troops were assigned to was the undignified, unwarranted, and unAmerican job of manning the street cars, breaking the political strike.

"At every minute of the time since then the Americans have been under the complete and absolute control of the British High Command. The American officers have been submerged and overshadowed.

"In the early days of the intervention it had been expected that the Russians would flock to the Allies' colors by the thousands, and several hundred extra British officers, most or all of whom bore service and wound stripes, resulting from long and honorable service in France, were sent out with the idea of training and officering the unborn Russian Army. But the army failed to spring up, and the officers were left high and dry without work.

"The 5,000 American troops came as a godsend to them. The vast forest front, covering some 50,000 square miles, was divided up in a number of districts and over each always was a British officer. Every order of any kind had to come through the British command, the rations were British, the equipment was British, and the expedition was British.

"The Americans were doing their fighting in small groups with, at the most their own platoon or company commanders over them, in certain instances, the tiny groups of Americans actually were under the British sergeants. It simply didn't go. The hard feeling popped up and grew. The same conditions prevailed with all the other members of the expedition and before long hatreds, jealousies, and distrusts were engendered which it was impossible to correct.

"All the time the Americans felt they were doing a job for certain nations, helping to collect their debts and reestablish their commercial supremacy. Part of this trying condition was brought about through the lack of proper spiritual leadership in the high allied command and part through the lack of proper leadership within the American forces themselves. This put the whole expedition on a false basis and it was reflected through the leaders down to the lowliest private.

"Hand in hand with this lack of spiritual leadership goes the expedition's lack of spiritual significance to the officers and soldiers. In the first place, most of the British, French, Italian, and Serbian soldiers making up the expedition were war weary. They were sent to the north district, understanding it was to be an easy, safe work of guarding ports. Instead, they found themselves fighting hundreds of miles away from the ports, down some railroad line or up some river.

"Vague rumors came to them of a great British-Russian deal at stake. Other rumors told of tremendous debts which Russia owed to Europe that must be collected. The avowed reason for the original entrance at Murmansk was the threat of the white Finns, under German leadership, to turn the ice free ports of Murmansk and Petchinga, on the Murman coast, into German submarine bases.

"This was outlived when the expedition started to Archangel under the slogan of guarding the great war supplies about to fall into the German hands. Reaching Archangel, the foreign soldiers found no supplies. This old, hard ridden theory of guarding the supplies at Archangel lasted through hundreds of columns of propaganda, even long after the American troops had landed a month later.

"From the start the expedition lacked the thrill of the drive that a great, honest, stated purpose would have given. The majority hated the job and transferred their hate to the Russians. They had no concern for them and did not try to understand the tremendous question the country was facing to discover the solution. They carried on in a half-hearted way, riding rough-shod over the feelings of the natives, and acting much more like conquerors than invited guests."

Restore Paris-Vienna Service.

BASLE, Switzerland, Feb. 9.—The French and the German-Austrian Governments, through their representatives, have reached an agreement for the resumption of fast train service between Paris and Vienna and Bucharest, according to the Vienna Neue Freie Presse.

timent of the city has been overwhelmingly behind the staunch stand of Mayor Hanson.

"Upon Seattle rests the responsibility for coping with an issue that may run through the land like wildfire, unless it is halted and beaten here," was the expression of one of the committee today. "Call it what they may, disguise it as they will, this is the first American skirmish with Bolshevism. If we stand firm the peril dies here.

"It is useless to present again the evidences upon which Seattle based its analysis of the most radical attempt at civic overthrow ever staged in an American municipality. The Central Labor Council admitted the unnaturalized Russian extremeist and revolutionary firebrand, Rikowsky to its inner circles and intimate councils, and a score of his ilk were with him in actively fomenting the general sympathy strike. Still other evidences of the real issue were the posters and publications, violently red, that flooded the streets and that were in every hand at the Labor Temple. Seattle labor reckoned without its public, and failed."

Called Off at Tacoma.

TACOMA, Feb. 9.—The general strike in Tacoma was officially called off this afternoon by the general strike committee, effective at 8 A. M. tomorrow.

The collapse of the general strike here was not unexpected becaus the movement lacked public support and sympathy, officials said. At no time was any important business or industry seriously crippled and there was not a unanimous response of labor organizations to the plan of strike leaders to completely tie up all private and municipal enterprises.

Resolutions adopted by the Strike Committee setting forth the reasons for suspending the strike asserted that "the general strike had fulfilled its mission in showing the solidarity of labor," and further showed the "employer of labor that the worker will, if necessary, use the general strike."

MILL STRIKE NOT ENDED.

Textile Workers at Lawrence to Reinforce Picket Lines.

LAWRENCE, Mass., Feb. 9.—Ike Kaplan, leader of the striking textile workers in this city, said tonight that through a misunderstanding one of the delegates who attended a conference with members of the State Board of Conciliation yesterday gave to the press an erroneous statement that Charles G. Wood, a member of the board, had offered the strikers fifty-one hours' pay for forty-eight hours' work. The delegate said that this offer was understood to have come from the manufacturers.

Kaplan said that at the conference Mr. Wood suggested that the strikers go back to work pending a settlement, but did not transmit any wage offer from the manufacturers. The strikers' delegates were unwilling to accept the suggestion. It is expected that further conference will be held this week.

At various nationality meetings of strikers held today it was voted to adhere to the demand for a forty-eight-hour week with fifty-four hours' pay. Kaplan addressed several of the meetings and predicted that the demand would soon be granted. He said that funds in support of the strike were coming from all parts of the country, and that the picket lines about all the mills would be re-enforced tomorrow.

Salvator Rugieri was arrested today on a charge of being an accessory to the murder of Biaggio Ventino, a striker, last Friday morning. The police allege that he and several other men were with Ventino just before he was shot.

A mass meeting was held in the City Hall tonight under the direction of the Citizens' Committee appointed by the Mayor to supervise the maintenance of order during the strike.

Sazonoff Says Kaiser Has Cause for Grievance in President Wilson's Offer to Bolsheviki.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—M. Pichon, who never forgets his absolute refusal for France to have anything to do with the Bolsheviki and who has been sceptical about the results of such a conference ever since it was decided upon, indulged today in what almost might be called hair splitting.

With reference to the meeting at Prinkipo and the appointment of allied delegates to go there to meet the Soviet representatives, the French Foreign Minister said there had been a misunderstanding by the Bolsheviki of what the invitation to them really meant. They had never been asked, he declared, to confer with the Allies, but merely to go to the Princes Islands, there to talk things over among themselves but in the presence of allied delegates, who might thereby have an opportunity to listen and learn what the Bolsheviki were striving for.

M. Pichon does not think the meeting can be held till the Bolsheviki thoroughly understand this point and realize that the Allied representatives have no authority to do anything but listen and report back to Paris.

M. Sazonoff reiterated yesterday his declaration that no Russians other than the Bolsheviki would go to Prinkipo.

"I have no love for the Kaiser," said the Russian statesman, "but it seems to me he is insulted by President Wilson's offer to treat with the Bolsheviki after Mr. Wilson's refusal to have anything to do with the Kaiser on the ground that he could not be trusted. The Kaiser is surely not so bad as the Bolsheviki. He is not an assassin."

PARIS, Feb. 9, (Associated Press.)—Stephen Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, commenting on the situation resulting from the Moscow Soviet Government's acceptance of the invitation to the Princes' Islands Conference, said there was no purpose of entering into negotiations with the Bolsheviki. To do so would be to encourage them to declare triumphantly to their people that the Allies were completely beaten and at their mercy. Any attempt to secure an agreement to recognize the outstanding Russian foreign debt, M. Pichon contended, would be heralded as establishing the truth of the Soviet claim that the Allies were moved only by capitalistic influences.

As to the possibility that the Soviet Government might agree to pay this debt, it was of all the governments the least able to undertake this task, which would require the entire energy and strength of an organized Russian Government operating in peace time.

The anti-Bolshevist governments of Russia are apparently firm in declining to participate in the Princes Islands conference. Nicholas Tschaikovsky, President of the Provisional Government of Northern Russia, told The Associated Press today that he and his Government had decided not to go, and were in full accord with the position taken by the Russian committee in Paris, headed by Prince Georges E. Lvov.

Sergius Sazonoff, representing the Denikine, Kolchak, and Don Governments, reiterated his refusal to participate in the conference. He declared that General Denikine and other experienced officers were eager that the Allies should permit the organization of a volunteer army of 100,000 to 150,000 men from the Allies as the nucleus of a force for the protection of the Black Sea ports and the formation of an enlarged Russian army, which could only be made possible at an early date through foreign aid.

The former Foreign Minister said that the Russian part of the force would do the fighting against the Bolsheviki, but desired foreign support at the bases, as well as ammunition and funds, for which ample security was available.

M. Sazonoff's plan for an anti-Bolshevist campaign does not include the occupation of the Baltic ports, but takes in Archangel.

President Tschaikovsky is in agreement with M. Sazonoff as to the plan, but insists that the effort must be coordinated by the Allies and the operation placed under a single command to avoid the misunderstandings which would result from assigning zones of influence to various powers and not harmonizing all the operations.

The Ukrainian Soviet Government has announced that it is willing to accept the invitation of the Allies to the conference, according to Le Temps, but it considers the date fixed, Feb. 15, too near at hand. The Government also expresses a preference for holding the conference at Paris instead of on the Princes Islands.

CAUTIONS BRITISH STRIKERS

Labor M. P. Preaches Patriotism—Lloyd George Begins Discussions.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Premier Lloyd George, who returned from Paris last night, was engaged early this morning in discussing the labor troubles in the United Kingdom with the Cabinet Ministers and Board of Trade officials. Many meetings of railway workers were in progress during the day for the discussion of labor questions from the national standpoint.

Immediately upon the return of Arthur Henderson from the Continent a joint meeting will be held of the Labor Party and Trades Union Parliamentary Committee and other interested bodies to discuss the entire situation.

At a big meeting of the railway men held in the Euston Theatre today, James Henry Thomas, Labor member of Parliament and Secretary of the National Union of Railway Men, made a strong appeal to the workers to keep the labor movement on constitutional lines.

It was within the union's power, he said, to say at any time to the State: "Unless you do this we will paralyze commerce." The workmen, however, Mr. Thomas added, had to consider that their duty as citizens had a stronger claim than sectional interests. If they achieved their object at the expense of the State, then they would be destroying their claim to citizenship.

Full application of the agreement for an eight-hour day, Mr. Thomas continued, made necessary the release of at least 128,000 railway men from the army; but demobilization of the army now depended upon the Railway Operating Corps. If that corps were demobilized, as was demanded, the troops would be left stranded in France, Belgium, and Germany. It would be absurd to say that the other soldiers who had been fighting as the railway men had did not matter and could be left stranded.

The speaker added that a new system was about to be introduced for feeding the troops rather by water than rail routes. This, he said, would facilitate demobilization of the railway men.

Mr. Thomas said that negotiations on the whole national program would be begun Feb. 12. He appealed to all railway men to await the outcome of these negotiations and action by Parliament.

ITALIAN SEA DEFENSE BETRAYED TO TEUTONS

Court-martial on Sinking of the Leonardo da Vinci Shows Work of Zurich Bureau.

MILAN, Feb. 9.—The Genoa court-martial proceeding concerning the sinking of the dreadnought Leonardo da Vinci has dispelled much of what had been a mystery to the public.

It turns out that Vincenzi, a fruit merchant from Modena, and accomplices in the Italian naval and police departments were regularly engaged by the home Government in counterspy service, which accounts for their easy, continual movements in Italy and Switzerland. Once in direct contact with the notorious Dr. Mayer and his Austro-German spy bureau at Zurich, they were speedily won over by the offer of munificent bribes to supply minute information regarding the movements of Italian, French, and British warships in the Mediterranean and regarding the coastal defenses of every one of the Adriatic ports.

In this way the enemy knew that Brindisi harbor was defended by an extensive mine field at a specified distance off the coast, that there were notable and ever increasing French and British forces in that part of the sea and at Taranto, while there were no war vessels at all at Bari. The enemy even learned that the Adriatic shore railway was patrolled by five armored trains mounted exclusively with six-inch guns.

Asked to explain why he failed to return to his headquarters in Italy after receiving from Austria 210,000 as his personal share in the plot for blowing up the Leonardo da Vinci, Vincenzi said that he was ordered into internment camps, first at Innsbruck and later at Trent, where Italians subsequently arrested him. Curious facts leaked out at the trial respecting Cavalier, alias Battistella, another arch-conspirator in the Leonardo affair. A Neapolitan by birth he was the son of the head porter at the Austrian consulate at Naples. Being of studious turn of mind, his father sent him to a high school, after which he was taken on the consulate staff as Secretary and thence rose to be Austrian Consul.

When Italy declared war the Imperial Government summoned him to Vienna, where he was transformed into an Austrian citizen and dispatched to Zurich to superintend the Italian traitor gang and in particular to devise the destruction of the famous battleship.

High hopes are now entertained of refloating the sunken vessel. Ten enormous cylinders, each capable of raising 4,000 tons, have been constructed in the Royal Navy Dockyards and sent to the spot for that purpose.

DUSSELDORF STRIKE WINS.

Spartacides Concede Most of Their Opponents' Demands.

COLOGNE, Feb. 7.—The strike of the official and professional classes at Düsseldorf is ended, the Spartacides having conceded most of the points demanded.

Bourgeois delegates who had been imprisoned as hostages have been liberated.

According to a Berlin dispatch on Feb. 5 the whole city of Düsseldorf had "walked out." The strikers included officials and employes of the public services, bankers, lawyers, physicians, and teachers. This protest was declared to be the first of its kind to be applied as a retaliation against Spartacide terrorism.

How to safeguard your Life Insurance money

IF you consider your duty to your family done when you arrange to leave them Life Insurance money in bulk, we suggest your attention to the following:

Life insurance companies report that most policies are paid to beneficiaries in bulk sums. What becomes of these bulk sums?

Three common dangers

1. The first to take their toll of insurance money are usually the speculative investments. Speculative investments seem to have a fatal fascination for women suddenly left with money.
2. Well-intentioned people with financial axes to grind come trooping in. So called "friends of the family" are often found in this class. Haphazard use of the insurance money results.
3. Frequently, insurance money is merely banked. Being too accessible it often quickly wastes away.

If you agree that such money-waste should be guarded against, we are prepared to put before you a dependable safety-measure.

A COLUMBIA TRUST FUND
for safeguarding the proceeds of Life Insurance

A Columbia Trust Fund is simply money set aside under the protection of the Columbia Trust Company and invested to provide periodical income for definite objects.

Life Insurance or any other money may be used to form the Trust Fund. We are bound by a written agreement to carry out your wishes definitely and absolutely.

Two examples

Suppose you wish to provide for your wife for, say 10 years, until the children are old enough to take care of her. A Columbia Trust Fund can be made to provide for that need—with installments payable to your wife in the amount you wish and on the dates you wish.

Or,

you may plan to send your boy to college. The boy may not know the value of money. By putting insurance or other money into a Columbia Trust Fund, the sound financing of the boy is assured. No one can touch a cent of the money except at the time you wish and in the amount you wish. Your wishes are binding.

OUR charges for handling each Columbia Trust Fund are very moderate. The commission we receive depends on the amounts we receive and pay out.

We recommend that you look into this matter of Columbia Trust Funds without delay. Our recommendations and service will be based on years of experience. We suggest that you have an informal talk with a Vice-President at any one of our offices. He will be glad to explain the form of Columbia Trust Fund which will meet your individual need.

THINK LEON TROTZKY ASPIRES TO BE CZAR

Bolshevist War Minister Changes from Flashy Clothes and Red Ties to a Uniform.

USES THE IMPERIAL TRAIN

Mourning Demonstrations for Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg at Petrograd and Moscow.

WARSAW, Feb. 7, (Associated Press.)—That Bolshevism is in its critical stage, either turning to imperialism, with perhaps Leon Trotzky, Minister of War and Marine, as the new Emperor, or slipping back to the idea of the old Nihilism, with a sort of orderly disorder, is the impression given by many refugees of all nationalities who have arrived here from Russia.

The correspondent has talked to a number of these people as to what might happen in Russia if there is no outside interference. One of them was a Bolshevist soldier who deserted while his contingent was engaged in raiding the country west of Minsk.

"Our chief characteristic," he said, "is that we are tired—tired of fooling, tired of killing, tired of fighting and tired of wandering from pillar to post. There is no doubt that Leon Trotzky is attempting to obtain order and to whip the troops into shape. He is known to be terribly ambitious, and possibly he is dreaming of becoming Czar, knowing that Belshevism has failed."

Recent rumors that the Soviet Government troops have evacuated Petrograd are unconfirmed. There was a general belief in Petrograd during January that the Allies were about to occupy the city. It was even stated that the Entente Powers had issued a proclamation to that effect, and many persons claimed to be able to cite quotations from the document. Bolshevist chiefs have been so alarmed that a trainload of supplies was recently turned back while on the road from Moscow to Petrograd in the belief that the Allies were in the latter city.

Trotzky is reported to have changed from his flashy clothes and red neckties to a uniform. He is said to be riding here and there on the train formerly at the disposal of the Emperor and he is said to be using the former imperial automobile.

The deaths at Berlin of Dr. Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, the German Spartacan leaders, apparently made a deep impression on the Bolshevist chieftains. Trotzky ordered public mourning at Petrograd, and street car traffic was stopped, but when officers tried to close the theatres, the sailors, who seem to do as they please in Petrograd, are reported to have declared they were going to dance and enjoy themselves as usual.

Great demonstrations were held before the Winter Palace and the red flag was everywhere at half staff. There were violent speeches in which Philip Scheidemann, a member of the Ebert Cabinet in Berlin, was bitterly attacked. His effigy, made of cotton wool, was hanged and solemnly burned. The "Nardovni Dom," or "People's House," was rechristened "the House of Rosa and Liebknecht."

There was also organized a mourning demonstration at Moscow, it being said that it was for "the oppressed nations." Among those who participated were a few Chinese coolies and some Bengalese, who were wrapped in furs alleged to have been confiscated by the Bolsheviki. One speaker said: "We Bolsheviki are the legendary Titans who will break from our shoulders all the chains of the world."

It is said that Feodor Chaliapine, a favorite opera singer during the later days of the imperial regimé, is singing at the opera at Moscow at an enormous salary. Reports have been received that executions are being hurried so that jailors may have a holiday during celebrations, there being an average of from six to eight persons put to death each day at Petrograd and Moscow.

Arrivals from Petrograd are now very rare. One lad came to the Polish frontier recently and said that he had traveled in a sleeping car the curtains of which had been cut, the windows broken, and the walls plastered with Bolshevist placards. In his compartment was a woman who journeyed nearly 300 miles to buy some sugar near the frontier. The car was so crowded, he said, that men slept in the baggage racks, which were roomy and strong.

SUFFRAGE DISPLACES NEW REVENUE BILL

Votes for Women Amendment to be Taken Up in the Senate Today.

EARLY ACTION IS EXPECTED

Tax Measure to be Passed Soon and Probably Held for Wilson's Return.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Action upon the War Revenue bill, which was adopted in the House yesterday by a vote of 310 to 11, will be moved in the Senate immediately upon the disposal by the latter body of the resolution to submit to the States the question of an amendment to the Constitution granting nation-wide suffrage to women.

Announcement has been made that the woman suffrage proposal will be the first business before the Senate when it convenes tomorrow, and Senator Simmons, Chairman of the Finance Committee, said tonight that he would not ask that the War Revenue bill receive the right of way.

It was possible, Mr. Simmons said, that the suffrage question would be disposed of before the Senate adjourned tomorrow, and in that event he would ask immediately that action be taken on the Revenue bill. The general belief tonight was that, even should it be found possible to get the Revenue bill before the Senate some time tomorrow afternoon, there was little chance of a vote being taken before Tuesday.

While Mr. Simmons is confident that the Revenue bill will be adopted by the Senate by a large majority, and without alteration which would necessitate its return to conference, it is probable that several of the Senators will demand the privilege of stating their objections to certain features. The long statement accompanying the bill must be read, and Mr. Simmons will speak.

It does not appear at this time that there is much chance of this program being carried out in time to take a vote upon the measure before adjournment tomorrow, especially if the debate on the woman suffrage proposal takes up much of the Senate's day. Senator Simmons said tonight that he would not ask for a night session. He felt that, as it was now proposed to hold the bill here until President Wilson's return from France, there was no such reason for pressing its speedy adoption as had existed when there was still a chance of putting it in the hands of the President while he was in Europe.

Mr. Simmons confirmed the statement made by Representative Kitchin to the House members yesterday that a joint resolution would be presented to Congress after the adoption of the bill in its present form for the purpose of repealing Section 904 of the Excise Tax Title which levies 10 per cent. on the sale of certain so-called semi-luxuries. There has been an agreement made that the conferees will get together after the passage of the bill and prepare such a resolution.

It is understood that all thought of repealing the existing rates on second-class mail matter during the life of the present Congress has been abandoned because of the unalterable opposition to such a step by Mr. Kitchin. The decision in this matter, therefore, will be left to the next Congress, which will be Republican in both branches.

In this connection, it was explained that, as the second-class postal rates came under the heading of tax legislation, any movement to alter the terms of the present law would have to be initiated in the House. The Senate conferees attempted to accomplish the substitution of lower rates and the abolishment of the provisions of the present zone system, but the House conferees, led by Mr. Kitchin, refused to give way. Mr. Kitchin, it is said, also refused to listen to any proposal to place the question of an alteration of rates before the House.

What action the next Congress will take is problematical, but it will be discussed by the Republican party leaders as soon as they come into power.

SUFFRAGISTS BURN WILSON IN EFFIGY

men have sixty-three votes pledged for the resolution, but one more is needed, because its passage requires a two-thirds vote. The women are trying to get Senator Hale of Maine to come over to their side and will present to him tomorrow a petition signed by a majority of his State legislators. A petition also will be presented to Senator Gay of Louisiana.

A number of the members of the militant forces who intended to go to the Senate gallery were among those arrested tonight. Mrs. John J. Rogers, Chairman of the National Advisory Council, is one who will be present. There is sure to be a large delegation.

While the militants were girding on their armor today the more gentle branch of the suffragists, the National Woman Suffrage Association, was making plans to attend the Senate session tomorrow. The spokesman said they were hopeful, but refused to make any prediction. Among the New York women connected with this organization who will be present are Miss Mary Garrett May, Mrs. Frank J. Shuler, Mrs. Stanley McCormick, Miss Ester Ogden, Mrs. Charles Tiffany, Mrs. F. Louis Slade, Mrs. Richards Aldrich, and Mrs. V. Everit Macy.

The anti-militant workers, in a statement issued late tonight by its Vice President, Miss Mary Garrett Hay, denounced the demonstration staged by the National Woman's Party, and questioned the sincerity of the militants. Miss Hay's statement read:

"The suffragists, with all the women of America, have been obliged to stand the shame and stigma of the outrageous performances of the members of the National Woman's Party—the I. W. W. of the suffrage movement. In character, we have tried to consider them misguided, but today's demonstration on the eve of the calling up of the vote on the Federal woman suffrage amendment makes it a question whether the members of the Woman's Party want the success of the amendment or publicity for their organization.

"This is not a party issue. Such an insult to the President of this great nation must be resented by all Republicans and Democrats alike. Confident in the discrimination and wisdom of the members of the United States Senate, I know that they will not permit such actions to prejudice their sense of justice and their respect for the millions of American women who for half a century have been asking for enfranchisement."

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of New York is President of the association.

PHILIP GIBBS COMES TO LECTURE ON WAR

Famous Correspondent Reaches Halifax on Ship with Canadian Troops.

Special to The New York Times.

HALIFAX, N. S., Feb. 9.—Philip Gibbs, the famous English war correspondent, whose daily descriptive stories of the fighting in which the British Armies participated, and particularly the "big shows" in which the Canadians won their laurels, were followed by thousands of readers both in America and Great Britain, is a passenger on board the Cunard Liner Carmania, which sailed from here today bound for New York.

Mr. Gibbs, who was in Halifax for the first time, spent much of his time with the Canadian forces at the front. His brilliant dispatches, which appeared daily in THE NEW YORK TIMES, during the period of the war, were eagerly read by thousands of Canadians, many of whom took advantage of the opportunity of making a permanent history of the great war and preserved all of his articles.

"I have been with Canadians many times at the front," he said, "and I am glad to have had the opportunity of traveling home with them. To me, as to them, the trip was a historic voyage. I have talked with many on the way across, and heard of their experiences.

"Too much credit cannot be given the Canadians for the work they did on the other side. The attack on Cambrai was a severe struggle, and they had many casualties. They were fighting on the north while the English were on the south, and I went into Cambrai with the Canadian forces."

Mr. Gibbs is going to the United States to lecture, and will endeavor to tell Americans what the British people have suffered during the last four years. He expects to be in the United States about two months, and probably will take a run into Canada to speak at Montreal and Toronto.

When asked about the labor trouble in Great Britain, Mr. Gibbs said he thought that it would be a long and hard fight between capital and labor and that labor would win. He did not think that it would reach the Bolsevist stage, which was contrary to British institutions and British character.

"But there need be no doubt about it," said Mr. Gibbs, "England will never be the old England—a new England is already in the making. The men who were torn up, as it were, by the roots from their old life and were shaken up by the convulsions of war are not going to go back to the old life or tolerate the old order of things in land and industry."

In the course of his service as war correspondent, Mr. Gibbs went through most of the heaviest fighting safely. He was stricken with trench fever on two occasions. Soon after the armistice was signed he met with a serious accident when a heavy motor truck dashed into his car. He suffered serious injuries, from which he has not yet fully recovered, but he is in excellent spirits and the sea voyage benefited him very much. He is a charming conversationalist, and one would never guess from his modest demeanor and simple, quiet speech that he was the most famous war correspondent in the world.

CARPENTERS WOULD ARBITRATE STRIKE

President Hutcheson Wants War Labor Board Mediation—Employers Silent on Offer.

"OPEN SHOP" AT ARMY BASE

Work to Resume There Today—Employers Will Discuss Grievances Only When Strikers Return.

William L. Hutcheson, President of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, last night announced a willingness on the part of the 25,000 strikers against the Building Trades Employers' Association to submit their differences to the War Labor Board for decision.

Mr. Hutcheson said he would step aside as Alternate Chairman of the War Labor Board, so that the decision might be given purely on the merits of the case. He was waiting, he added, to learn the attitude of the employers toward this suggestion.

Meanwhile the deadlock between the carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, masons and hoisting engineers on the one side, and the Employers' Association on the other, continued yesterday. Unless the men return to work, the employers have refused to treat with them. This morning, said Ronald P. Taylor, President of the employers' association, work would go ahead on the army base contract in Brooklyn, without the help of the striking carpenters and the sympathetic allied trades.

"We don't expect to man the job with a full force at once," he declared, "but a few days should see a full force working there. I understand that the Government has given orders that the work proceed, and proceed it must. I can only repeat that if there is any disposition to return to work shown on the part of the strikers, and if they actually do come back, we have a committee ready to discuss grievances with the union leaders.

Sees Much Building Ahead.

"Our aim is to stabalize wages once and for all, so that when we promise that a certain job will be done in a certain time, we will be able to make good. There is much work ahead for us this year and next, as shown by the plans filed, but we want business to run smoothly. If this strike is settled within a few days, as I hope it will be, extensive building will start here early in the Spring. Toward the end of the year, building, which has been comparatively inert for so long a time, will return to its own.

"We had been in harmony with the carpenters sixteen years until the beginning of this present difficulty. We want that harmony to continue, both for their sakes and ours. But we do wish to know whether their agreements with us are worth the paper on which they are written. The men have violated their agreement in their strike, and it is a cardinal principle of the association not to deal with strikers."

Mr. Taylor said he had not heard from the cities in which the association members are fulfilling contracts, but he did not consider that the work would be greatly hampered by the strike.

"If the employers are patriotic men," said Mr. Hutcheson, "they will submit the entire controversy to the War Labor Board, the instrumentality set up by Presidential proclamation. Since the establishment of this board by the President more than 21,000 labor and employers' disputes have been adjusted."

Plan to Picket Army Base.

He declared that plans had been laid for the picketing of the Army Base job today with carpenters recently discharged from the army and navy. These men, still in uniform, said union leaders, would police the job without disorder in behalf of the strikers if the employers determined to make good the threat of an "open shop."

Thomas R. Priest, International Vice President of the Bricklayers', Plasterers', and Masons' Union, said last night that his union had not been officially notified of the lockout by the employers, but he thought this would come today. The lockout, he added, would not affect more than 400 men working on association jobs in the various cities.

"The decreasing cost of materials is playing its part," he said. "Cement has dropped 40 cents a barrel since October. Bricks are now $22 per 1,000 and will go down. Formerly 1,000 brick cost only $9.50. Employers can make money on their contracts by waiting, since all are protected by strike clauses."

Plans had been announced, he said, for more than 25,000,000 square feet of floor space in the vicinity of Fulton Street, and many more building projects would be undertaken in the uptown districts.

GERMAN SHIPS DELAYED.

Wage Question Holds Back Sailing of Food Fleet.

HAMBURG, Feb. 9.—The Frankfort Gazette announces that the German vessels which are to be turned over to the Entente to transport food will comprise nine steamers of the Hamburg-American Line and two ships each from the Oriental Lines, the Cosmos Line, the German-Australian Navigation Society, and the Hamburg and South American Line.

The newspaper adds that the sailings of the vessels have been delayed by the high wage demands of the seamen, but that this question will be settled at a new conference with the allied fepresentatives at Spa.

Red Cross to Care for Them at Request of General Pershing.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—At the request of General Pershing, the American Red Cross has appointed a commission to co-operate with the interallied commission for feeding and repatriating the Russian prisoners in Germany. It is estimated that there are 100,000 sick Russian prisoners in German hands.

There are more than 200 prison camps in Germany, which held at one time 1,100,000 Russian prisoners. The number is now believed to have been reduced by deaths and men released to 800,000, who receive barely 50 per cent. of the amount of nutriment necessary to keep an unemployed person in fairly good condition.

The American Red Cross Commission, headed by Major Carl Taylor, formerly Deputy Commissioner of the Red Cross in Italy, numbers thirty-five persons. It will maintain headquarters in Berlin.

HOLD SIX AS "AUTO GANG"

Queens Police Believe They Have All the Holdup Men in Jail.

The "green auto" gang, thought to be responsible for three trolley car holdups last week in Queens and the holdup of a saloon in Manhattan, has been broken up, say the police in Queens, who have in custody six men believed by them to compose the gang.

All six were arraigned in the Long Island City Court yesterday morning before Magistrate Conway on charges of burglary, and, after waiving examination, were held in $10,000 bail each for the Grand Jury.

The last two arrested were Alfred Freidlander, 21 years old, of 2,214 Pitkin Avenue, Brooklyn, and Charles Nowlak, 18 years old, of 732 Belmont Avenue, Brooklyn. Previously David Pinsky, 18, of 355 Schenk Avenue, Brooklyn; Tracy McDonough of 93 High Street, Brooklyn, said by the police to be the leader of the gang; Anthony Costa of 415 Liberty Avenue, Brooklyn, and Herman Rosenblum of 948 Blake Avenue, Brooklyn, said to have been the chauffeur of the "green auto," had been arrested.

The first two named are said to have been identified by Motorman Carl Klein, whose car was held up at Astoria and Junction Avenues. Costa, Freidlander, and Nowlak are said to have been identified by Olof Hendrickson of 222 Fisk Avenue, Maspeth, who was conductor of Klein's car.

Rosenblum has not been identified. The "green auto" is said by the police to be that of his father, who is in the auto livery business.

WHOLE NATION PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT

LODGE AND CONGRESS HONOR ROOSEVELT

Senator Who Was His Intimate Friend Eulogizes ex-President at Memorial.

HOUSE CHAMBER THRONGED

Orator Visibly Affected as He Speaks Last Words of Tribute Notable for Eloquence.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—In the chamber of the House of Representatives this afternoon impressive services were held in honor of the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, with Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, intimate friend of the late ex-President, delivering the eulogium.

The memorial was the occasion of a joint session of the Senate and House. There were present nearly 2,000 persons, including members of the Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, Justices of the Supreme Court, army and navy heads, and other dignitaries. The galleries were thronged.

Two members of the Roosevelt family were present, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, a daughter, and Mrs. Douglas Robinson, a sister. Ex-President Taft also attended.

Senator Lodge's eulogy, which occupied an hour and fifty minutes in delivery, embraced a history of the late ex-President from his early life, through all his political activities and up to the time of his death. Mr. Lodge spoke in clear, even tones, standing before the Speaker's desk, at which sat Speaker Clark and Vice President Marshall.

As he spoke the last words of his address, which concerned the death sleep of Colonel Roosevelt, Senator Lodge's voice broke, and he had to steady himself as he sank into his chair. A deep hush fell upon the throng, broken when the Marine Band, from its sequestered place outside the Chamber, broke into the muffled strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the audience arose almost immediately. Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Mr. Prettyman, Chaplain of the Senate.

Arrival of Dignitaries.

The services began at 3 o'clock. For an hour before that the Marine Band had played appropriate music, while the galleries and the floor filled up. Members of the House occupied seats toward the rear of the Chamber.

Precisely at 3 o'clock the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House announced the arrival of the Vice President and members of the Senate. The Vice President took a seat next to Speaker Clark, while the Senators, of whom there were about seventy-five, occupied seats toward the front of the chamber.

"The Ambassadors, the Ministers, and the Chargés d'Affaires," announced the Sergeant at Arms. Down the middle aisle were escorted the representatives of foreign Governments, including the Ambassador of Spain, Señor Riano y Gayangos, in full-dress uniform; the Bolivian Minister, also in full uniform, and representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Russia, Mexico, Chile, Portugal, Norway, Sweden, Guatemala, Denmark, Siam, Venezuela, Bulgaria, Salvador, Ecuador, Colombia, Honduras, Panama, Rumania, Haiti, China, Montenegro, Cuba, Switzerland, Belgium, Paraguay, the Netherlands, and Persia.

After the diplomatic corps, "the ex-President of the United States" was announced, and Mr. Taft walked down the aisle. After him came Justices of the Supreme Court, including Chief Justice White and Justices Day, McKenna, McReynolds, and Brandeis. Members of the Cabinet came next, these being Secretaries Baker, Glass, Redfield, and Daniels. Mr. Polk represented the State Department and Mr. Dockery the Postmaster General's Department.

Among the heads of the army and navy present were General March, Chief of Staff; Surgeon General Blue, Admiral Sibert, and Admiral Fletcher, General McCauley, who was aid-de-camp to President Roosevelt at the White House, sat in the gallery.

The Marine Band played "How Firm a Foundation," Colonel Roosevelt's favorite hymn, after which Vice President Marshall announced the joint session open. The Rev. Mr. Coudon, blind Chaplain of the House, offered prayer.

Vice President Marshall, in announcing Senator Lodge as the speaker of the occasion, referred to him as "scholar, orator, and friend of the late lamented President."

Senator Lodge delivered his eulogy without anw attempt at oratorical effect. Only once or twice during his delivery was he interrupted by applause, and then it was restrained, in keeping with the occasion.

Like a Fallen Tower.

Senator Lodge opened his address with the quotation:

> A tower is fallen, a star is set! Alas! Alas!
> for Celin.

"The words of lamentation from the old Moorish ballad, which in boyhood we used to recite," he went on, "must, I think, have risen to many lips when the world was told that Theodore Roosevelt was dead. But whatever the phrase the thought was instant and everywhere.

"Variously expressed, you heard it in the crowds about the bulletin boards, from the man in the street and the man on the railroads, from the farmer in the fields, the women in the shops, in the factories, and in the homes. The pulpit found in his life a text for sermons. The Judge on the bench, the child at school, alike paused for a moment, conscious of a loss. The cry of sorrow came from men and women of all conditions, high and low, rich and poor, from the learned and the ignorant, from the multitude who had loved and followed him, and from those who had opposed and resisted him. The newspapers pushed aside the absorbing reports of the events of these fateful days and gave pages to the man who had died.

"Flashed beneath the ocean and through the air went the announcement of Theodore Roosevelt's death, and back came a world-wide response from courts and cabinets, from press and people, in other and far distant lands. Through it all ran a golden thread of personal feeling which gleams so rarely in the sombre formalism of public grief. It would seem that here was a man, a private citizen, conspicuous by no office, with no glitter of power about him, no ability to reward or punish, gone from earthly life, who must have been unusual even among the leaders of men, and who thus demands our serious consideration.

"We cannot approach Theodore Roosevelt along the beaten paths of eulogy or satisfy ourselves with the empty civilities of commonplace funeral tributes," said Senator Lodge, "for he did not make his life journey over main-traveled roads, nor was he ever commonplace. Cold and pompous formalities would be unsuited to him who was devoid of affectation, who was never self-conscious, and to whom posturing to draw the public gaze seemed not only repellent but vulgar. In his spirit of devotion to truth's simplicity, I shall try to speak of him today."

Referring to Roosevelt's inheritance of comparative wealth, Senator Lodge said:

"He lacked the spur of necessity to prick the sides of his intent. * * * Theodore Roosevelt put behind him temptation to a life of sports and pleasure, to lettered ease, to an amateur's career in one of the fine arts, perhaps to a money-making business. How he refused to tread the pleasant paths that opened to him on all sides and took the instant way which led over the rough road of toil and action, his life discloses."

Outlines His Life.

Mr. Lodge outlined the life of the man who came to play such a big part in the nation's life. With delicate health and nearsightedness in childhood, he became by sheer hard work an athlete and a rifle shot. This was typical, said Mr. Lodge. He spoke of how Roosevelt persisted in the unusual; how he made himself a national figure in one year at the age of 24 while serving in the New York State Legislature; how he fought and won for civil service reform when civil service was scoffed at by influential leaders, and of how he applied himself strenuously to the task of expelling favoritism and politics from the New York Police Force, through which "a purely local office became national in his hands, and his picture appeared in the shops of European cities."

As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, when he ordered Dewey to prepare for Manila Bay before war came, as Colonel of the Rough Riders regiment at San Juan, as Governor of New York, as Vice President Mr. Roosevelt's career was traced. After reviewing the Roosevelt Administration, touching upon many of the most important features, including Roosevelt's part in world politics which won the Nobel Peace Prize for the man "dreaded at the beginning on account of his combative spirit," and his fight for a larger Government control of railroads and against the political influence of combinations of capital, Senator Lodge added:

"In the Panama Canal he left the most enduring, as it was the most visible, monument of his administration. Much criticised at the moment for his action in regard to it, which time since then has justified and which history will praise, the great fact remains that the canal is there. He said himself that he made up his mind that it was his duty to establish the canal and have the debate about it afterward, which seemed to him better than to begin with indefinite debate and have no canal at all. This is a view which posterity both at home and abroad will accept and approve."

Referring to Roosevelt's fight for preparedness before the United States entered the world war, Senator Lodge said:

"He would have had us protest and take action at the very beginning in 1914, when Belgium was invaded. He would have had us go to war when the murders of the Lusitania were perpetrated. He tried to stir the soul and rouse the spirit of the American people, and despite every obstacle he did awaken them so that when the hour came, in April, 1917, a large proportion of the American people were even then ready in spirit and in hope.

"How telling his work has been was proved by the confession of his country's enemies, for when he died the only discordant note, the only harsh words, came from the German press. Germany knew whose voice it was that had more powerfully than any other called Americans to the battle in behalf of freedom and civilization."

Denied Most Prized Reward.

Because he was not permitted to go to Europe at the head of a body of soldiers, said Mr. Lodge, Roosevelt "was denied the reward which he would have ranked above all others, 'the great prize of death in battle.'"

"He lived to see right prevail," continued the Senator. "He lived to see civilization triumph over organized barbarism, and there was great joy in his heart. In all his last days the thoughts which filled his mind were to secure a peace which should render Germany forever harmless, and advance the cause of ordered freedom in every land and among every race. This occupied him to the exclusion of everything else except what he called and what we like to call Americanism. There was no hour down to the end when he would not turn aside from everything else to preach the doctrine of Americanism, of the principles and the faith upon which American Government rested, and which all true Americans should wear in their heart of hearts.

"He was a great patriot, a great man; above all, a great American. His country was the ruling, mastering passion of his life, from the beginning even unto the end.

"What a man was is ever more important than what he did. Theodore Roosevelt always believed that character was of greater worth and moment than anything else. He possessed abilities of the first order, which he was disposed to underrate because he set so much greater store upon the moral qualities which we bring together under the single word 'character.'"

Appraising Theodore Roosevelt's abilities, Mr. Lodge said in part:

"He had a powerful, well-trained, ever active mind. He thought clearly, independently, and with originality and imagination. These great gifts were sustained by an extraordinary power of acquisition, joined to a greater quickness of apprehension, a greater swiftness in seizing upon the essence of a question, than I have ever happened to see in any other man. He had a capacity for concentration which enabled him to read with remarkable rapidity anything which he took up.

"He knew and held details always at his command, but he was never mastered by them. He never failed to see the forest on account of the trees or the city on account of the houses. In speaking as in writing, he was always full of force and vigor. He had a large capacity for administration, clearness of vision, promptness in decision, and a thorough apprehension of what constituted efficient organization.

"The first requisite of leadership is to lead, and that ability Theodore Roosevelt possessed in full measure. His instinct was always to say 'Come,' rather than 'Go,' and he had the talent of command. He also had the rare gift of arresting attention sharply and suddenly, a very precious attribute.

"Roosevelt was always advancing, always struggling to make things better, to carry some much-needed reform, and help humanity to a large chance, to a fairer condition, to a happier life. Moreover, he looked always for an ethical question. He was at his best when he was fighting the battle of right against wrong.

A Mistaken Impression.

"The criticism most commonly made upon Theodore Roosevelt was that he was impulsive and impetuous, that he acted without thinking. He would have been the last to claim infallibility. His head did not turn when fame came to him and choruses of admiration sounded in his ears, for he was neither vain nor credulous. He knew that he made mistakes, and never hesitated to admit them to be mistakes, and to correct them or put them behind him when satisfied they were such. But he never wasted time in mourning, explaining, or vainly regretting them. It is also true that the middle way did not attract him. He was apt to go far both in praise and censure, although nobody could analyze qualities and balance them justly in judging men better than he. He spoke out with the most unrestrained frankness at all times and in all companies.

"When he had reached his conclusion he acted quickly and drove hard at his object, and this it was, probably, which gave an impression that he acted sometimes hastily and thoughtlessly, which was a complete misapprehension of the man. His action was emphatic, but emphasis implies reflection, not thoughtlessness.

"He had no hostility to a man because he had succeeded in business or because he had accumulated a fortune. He had but one standard, one test and that was whether a man, rich or poor, was an honest man, a good citizen, and a good American.

"Theodore Roosevelt had the largest personal following ever attained by any man in our history. By personal following is meant here that which supports and sustains and goes with a man simply because he is himself, a following which does not care whether their leader and chief is in office or out of office, which is with him and behind him, because they, one and all, believe in him and love him and are ready to stand by him for the sole and simple reason that they have perfect faith that he will lead them where they wish and where they ought to go."

Roosevelt's courage and sense of humor drew many to him, Senator Lodge observed.

"No man ever had a more abundant sense of humor—joyous, irrepressible humor—and it never deserted him," said the Senator. "Even at the most serious and even perilous moments, if there was a gleam of humor anywhere, he saw it and rejoiced and helped himself with it over the rough places. He loved fun, loved to joke and chaff, and, what is more uncommon, greatly enjoyed being chaffed himself. Even more generally effective than his humor was the universal knowledge that Roosevelt had no secrets from the American people."

Another quality, "homely, generous humanity," was emphasized by Senator Lodge.

"He never by any chance bored the American people," he said. "They might laugh at him or laugh with him, they might like what he said, they might agree with him or disagree with him, but they were never wearied of him, and he never failed to interest them. He was never heavy, laborious, or dull.

"No man ever prized sentiment or hated sentimentality more than he. He preached unceasingly the familiar morals which lie at the bottom of both family and public life.

"Theodore Roosevelt's ideal of public service was to be found in his life, and as his life drew to its close he had to meet his ideal of sacrifice face to face. All his sons went from him to the war and one was killed upon the field of honor.

"This is not the place to speak of his private life, but within that sacred circle no man was ever more fortunate in the utter devotion of a noble wife and the passionate love of his children. The absolute purity and beauty of his family life tell us why the pride and interest which his fellow-countrymen felt in him were always touched with the warm light of love. In the home, so dear to him, in his sleep, death came, and—

"'So Valiant-for-Truth passed over, and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side.'"

WILSON ATTENDS ROOSEVELT SERVICE

Hears Sermon by the Rev. C. W. Goodrich—Memorial Also Held in Another American Church.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing attended a memorial service in honor of Theodore Roosevelt at the American Church in the Rue de Berri this forenoon. The memorial sermon was preached by the Rev. Chauncey W. Goodrich.

Henry D. White of the American Peace Commission and Arthur J. Balfour, the British Foreign Secretary, attended a similar memorial service at the American Church of the Holy Trinity this afternoon. At this service Bishop Perry of Rhode Island preached the sermon.

POINDEXTER ON ROOSEVELT.

Senator Speaks at Washington Memorial—Services in Other Cities.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Besides the service at the Capitol, memorial exercises for Theodore Roosevelt were held today at the Pan American Union Building and at a theatre. Several hundred wounded soldiers from the Walter Reed Hospital heard John Barrett, Director General of the Pan American Union, extol the life and virtues of the former President, while Senator Poindexter of Washington delivered the oration at the theatre.

"The great keynote of Theodore Roosevelt's life and success was service," said Senator Poindexter. "He found rest and recreation by passing from one form of exertion to another. No man ever made a fuller use of the mental and physical powers with which he was endowed than Roosevelt. He put his talents to work, and the result was a great harvest of benefits for his time and generation and for those to come."

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 9.—Philadelphia today joined the nation in paying tribute to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt. Special memorial services were held in many churches and at a number of public meetings. The Governor of Pennsylvania and other prominent men eulogized the ex-President in addresses at a big mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House. In addition to Governor Sproul, the speakers included James M. Beck, Gifford Pinchot, and George Wharton Pepper.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 9.—The memory of Theodore Roosevelt was honored by thousands of Clevelanders at memorial services held this afternoon and evening. Several thousand people were unable to gain admittance to the afternoon services, at which John McCormack opened the program by singing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and Harry Lauder delivered a eulogy of Roosevelt.

WOOD EULOGIZES ROOSEVELT.

Most Dominant Figure in America Since Lincoln, Says General.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 11.—"He did more than any other President to make the world realize what the United States stands for and what a republican form of government means," declared Major Gen. Leonard Wood, in an address at the memorial services in honor of Theodore Roosevelt today. General Wood declared that Roosevelt's "broad vision, wide knowledge of world affairs and sound judgment were never more needed than today."

"It was impossible for him to be neutral in the face of wrong," he said. "He believed in a free press and free speech and understood that a democracy resenting criticism, smothering the press and hampering publicity, is a democracy in danger, if not a democracy dying.

"Along the fighting line in France and Flanders there were more inquiries concerning Colonel Roosevelt's opinion, his views, his probable line of action, than concerning all other Americans combined."

General Wood declared that Roosevelt realized that Leagues of Nations could only be enduring when based on community of interest and of areas, "and above all community of morals and ideals." He never believed or for a moment tolerated the idea that we should enter into any league which would deprive us of the right of free action within our own sphere of influence, or put us in a position of unpreparedness to do what we believed to be right, or in a condition which would render us unable to defend our own interests in case of need."

"He believed in avoiding entangling alliances," said the orator, "but realized that America must play her part when civilization and the rights of mankind were in danger. In Theodore Roosevelt's opinion, no man who refuses service to the limit of his ability, whether in war or peace, is fit to be a citizen.

"Theodore Roosevelt was the most inspiring and hence the most dominant figure in American life since Abraham Lincoln. We must pick up the torch where he dropped it and carry it on. This is vital to our country and to mankind."

"He detested sham and want of candor," General Wood declared in describing Colonel Roosevelt. "He had little patience with those adroit in the use of words and skilled in the building of phrases, but lacking the concrete courage to meet issues when national honor and civilization demanded action. He had the faculty of drawing a line between wisdom and folly."

Fifteen thousand persons joining in the melody of the national anthem opened the services, which were held in Memorial Hall. A great crowd was unable to gain admittance.

BOSTON, Feb. 9.—Representatives of many nationalities attended a meeting at the Church of All Nations tonight in memory of Theodore Roosevelt. City officials conducted a Roosevelt memorial service this afternoon, at which Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard spoke.

NATION HONORS COL. ROOSEVELT and patriotism, and by his pitiless invective he literally compelled action.

"Back of all that was done was the pressure of the demand of Roosevelt. 'For eighteen months,' said he in the early part of 1916, 'with this world-cyclone before our eyes, we as a nation have sat supine without preparing in any shape or way. It is an actual fact that there has not been one soldier, one rifle, one gun, one boat, added to the American Army or Navy so far, because of anything that has occurred in this war, and not the slightest step has yet been taken looking to the necessary preparedness. Such national short-sightedness, such national folly, is almost inconceivable.'

"He denounced the proposed program as a make-believe program, as one entirely inadequate to our needs. 'It is,' he said, 'a proposal not to do something effective immediately, but to do something entirely ineffective immediately and to trust that our lack will be made good in succeeding years.'

"He also demanded spiritual preparedness in a deepening sense of unity. He preached the gospel of undiluted and unhyphenated Americanism. 'The foreign-born population of this country,' he said, 'must be an Americanized population. No other kind can fight the battles of America either in war or peace. It must talk the language of its native-born fellow citizens, it must possess American citizenship and American ideals.' 'There is no such thing as a hyphenated American who is a good American. The only man who is a good American is the man who is an American and nothing else.' 'I,' he said, 'I am straight United States.'

"And when finally we could stand no longer the brutal assaults of Germany and declared that a state of war existed, he felt that his place was in that holiest of wars and he was ready to die fighting for his country. When he asked to be allowed to raise an army division to go to France, he had no thought of a return in glory.

"I well remember the night, shortly after the declaration of war, when at the close of a meeting at the Union League Club, he talked to a little company of his heart's wish. 'I shall not return,' he said, 'my sons may not return, my grandchildren may be left alone'—and no one could doubt that he meant what he said. But the greatest desire of his life was denied him. We can but faintly imagine the measure of his disappointment, but we may conjecture that it had no small share in hastening the final break-down. His country at war, and Roosevelt at home! That was the cruelest blow that fate could deal him.

Fought with Pen and Voice.

"But if he could not fight for liberty and humanity on the western front, he could fight with pen and voice at home. There was not a moment lost. With increasing vigor he demanded adequate forces, adequate equipment, speed, and efficiency. His lash knew no mercy, but it was a necessary lash. As it was, we were just in time. How late we should have been had it not been for Roosevelt, God only knows! But who can doubt the value of the service of that insistent demand in making it possible that we should arrive at the front, in force, in time to make the last great German drive a failure? He quickened the national consciousness; he developed the sense of unity, and when the country awoke he was the natural leader of an aroused America. His priceless service at home made all the world his debtor.

"If America by its aid at the critical moment made victory possible, it was the spur of Roosevelt that assured that aid, and while we acclaim the splendid service of officers and men, the pride of our army and navy, and of the host of willing workers, and are gratified at the vast achievements of the nation, let it not be forgotten that yonder in his last resting place in Oyster Bay lies our greatest hero of the war. He incarnated the spirit of America, and when he passed away, and controversy was no more and enemies were silenced, the country with one voice paid its tribute to the patriot who, without office or commission, had supplied the leadership which had not faltered or erred, and had fought to maintain the nation's honor.

Lauds His Home Life.

"It is with pleasure that we remember the family life of this stout-hearted American. Worthy in public life, he dignified the American home. He spoke of his father as the best man he had ever known; and the spirit of his father's house blessed his own. An ideal husband and father, his home was the beautiful abode of all that was worthy and true. He transmitted his own courage to his four sons, and all of his sons won distinction at the front. The last sacrifice for his country which his father longed to make in the battle for liberty his son Quentin did make, and in his heroic death achieved an imperishable honor of his own.

"It is small wonder that such a career as that of Theodore Roosevelt has a lasting fascination for young men. There was nothing sordid or commonplace or unclean to mar it. His courage, steadfastness, and faith, his deeds of daring, his physical prowess, his resourcefulness, his exploits as a hunter and explorer, his intellectual keenness, his personal charm, and his dominating patriotic motive make their irresistible appeal, and perhaps in the shaping of the ideals of the American youth for generations to come his most important service is yet to be rendered.

"He left us when we could ill afford to spare him. Against all that tended to destroy our Government, against all that is sinister and corrupt, against tyranny of every sort, against the exploitation of the weak and all injustice, against class hatred and class pride, against the enfeebling influence of pacifism, against the impractical schemes of visionaries, against every tendency to anarchy and Bolshevism, Theodore Roosevelt would have led the fight with his invincible common sense and his sound Americanism."

General Wood's Tribute.

A glowing tribute to Colonel Roosevelt by his closest personal friend, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, which was written by him in Kansas City, was read yesterday in various parts of the country. It was as follows:

"In Theodore Roosevelt's opinion, no man who refuses service to the limit of his ability, whether in war or peace, is fit to be a citizen. Knowing our men will always go to war for what they believe to be right, and that when they refuse we shall cease to be a nation, and realizing that our women will send them and despise them if they do not go, and that the better trained they are the fewer will die, he advocated universal training for national service, training on rational lines such as the Swiss or Australian. He realized that it was a false humanity; indeed it was brutal inhumanity, not to give the men who are to fight our battles a sporting chance.

"He saw the hideous unpreparedness of this country as the war crept upon us and strove to correct it by voice and pen, for he knew that not to prepare meant thousands of unnecessary dead. Having been in war, he realized how great the losses must be where the men, and especially the officers, are unprepared and where there is any shortage in the machines and weapons with which man fights on the ground, in the air, on the sea, or beneath its surface.

"'Speak softly but carry a big stick' with him meant to be just and fair, but be ready to meet the forces of wrong with the disciplined strength of right. He had little patience with those adroit in the use of words and skilled in the building of phrases but lacking the concrete courage to meet issues when national honor, the lives of our people, and the best interests of humanity and civilization demanded action.
